She Wore Boy's Clothes From Old China Dangerous Cody, in Russia When Edward Said Farewell

By ARTHUR BRISBANE

(Copyright, 1936, by King Features Syndicate, Inc., International copyright and all other rights reserved.)

Helen Coberly said she "never liked girl's clothes, wanted to be a boy."

Millions of other girls have said that. Helen lived up to it, put on boy's clothes, went through the boys' high school to the senior class, earning her way "digging ditches, mending fences."

Known to be a girl, expelled from the class, she weeps. Some intelligent young man with blue eyes and a kind heart, marrying Helen Coberly, might some day be the father of a great American.

Lincoln's mother, Nancy Hanks, could have dug ditches and mended fences, and probably wished that she was a boy, more than once. "Bertha of the big feet," in Victor's poem, mother of Charlemagne, could have played good football.

A roar comes from the great Chinese dragon, the 400,000,000 that live, labor, die and are exploited. The Chinese Generalissimo General Chiang Kai-Shek, attached to the ancient Chinese belief that right is as powerful that it does not "require to be supported or enforced by might" is arrested by his mutinous troops demanding "an immediate declaration of war against Japan; recovery of all Chinese territory, including Manchuria."

This outbreak worries Tokio, and it might, if China had a few fighting leaders, with enough airplanes and good pilots. China now is like Niagara Falls before the turbines were put in, much power going to waste. What combined military genius and modern weapons accomplish, backed by a nation of 400,000,000?

Russia's production of gold increases rapidly, with 144 gold fields active; the total production not less than $200,000,000 a year, and according to some estimates, nearly $300,000,000.

Russia already surpasses Canada and the United States in gold production, and expects soon to surpass the British South African gold fields, and all the gold goes to the government. Prospectors and miners get "praise."

This gold production does not mean greater power for Bolshevism. Quite the other way, it may be the worst thing that could happen to the Karl Marx-Lenin-Stalin theory.

As nations and individuals become rich they become conservative.

There is still reverence for English kings in "Democratic America." In New York clubs of "aristocratic" membership, all rose, when the broadcast began, and not one sat down while the King was speaking. In England they sat down—they are used to kings there.

Mrs. C. H. Wilson, of Columbia, S. C., went farther; her house was on fire, she told firemen, let me know if you think the roof will fall, and went on listening to Prince Edward, while the house burned.

It takes a long time to breed out of human beings that which is inbred into them through ages; hence the persistence of our various superstitions.

Beagle hounds wanted: F. C. Cobb, in charge of the Boy Scout reservation at Allaire, Farmingdale, New Jersey, would like a few couples of good beagle hounds for Boy Scouts to follow through the woods. Anybody inclined to contribute one or two good animals, communicate with Mr. Cobb.

Sending his first ambassador to Japan, Stalin told him to "remember that the Japanese are smart and that you must keep your mouth shut, your ears open, listen."

Stalin seems to have taken that advice to himself and recently "out-smarted" Tokio. Complaints and some threats from Japan Stalin answered by refusing to denounce a fisheries treaty, permitting Japanese fishing along Russian coasts. Millions of Japanese depend on that treaty for food, and unless Stalin relents, Japan's government will probably be forced out.

Japan apparently does not care to fight about it, but keeps one of Russia's bombing planes and submarines, assembled close by, at Vladivostock, aimed at Japan's cities, factories and shipping.

The Russian ambassador to the United States, asked about a year ago whether Japan and Russia would fight, replied, "No. Japan waited three years too long and knows it." Perhaps she does know it; Japan is wise.

Life Story of England's New King--Begins Today

What manner of man is the new King of England? How has he been trained for the throne vacated by his strong-willed and romantic brother? What are his preferences and his prejudices? Hudson Hawley, brilliant Universal Service writer, answers all these and many more questions the world is asking in a comprehensive biography of King George VI the Boston Evening American begins on this page today.

WALLY'S FEARS BLOCK REUNION WITH EDWARD

Life Story of England's New King

(This is the first chapter of an authoritative life story of Great Britain's new ruler. The opening chapter describes how the Duke of York becomes the third sailor King to sit on the British throne in 107 years. Something of his sailor ancestors and the atmosphere in which he and his older brother, the abdicated King Edward VIII, spent their childhood are revealed in the first instalment.)

CHAPTER ONE

By HUDSON HAWLEY

(Copyright, 1936, by Boston Evening American and Universal Service)

With the accession to the throne of the Duke of York as King George VI, Great Britain greets her third sailor Monarch in the course of 107 years.

And this is a sailor King who has seen sharp action in the greatest naval engagement of modern times, the battle of Jutland, fought just twenty and a half years ago.

Aside from that exploit, the title of "Sailor King" should be enough to make King George popular with a nation which for centuries has lived by the sea.

His great-great grand uncle, King William IV, who as a midshipman in the Royal Navy took part in the occupation of New York during the war of the American Revolution, was the first to be so called.

"Old Billy," as he was irreverently but affectionately known in his declining years, trod the same path, from the "school of snootics" at Osborne to flag rank.

Found Nelson

Perhaps his greatest claim to Britain's gratitude was his chance discovery of an obscure and poor young captain in Jamaica, toward the end of the war with the American colonists, and his writing home a letter of recommendation for him.

That young captain was Horatio Nelson, who destroyed the combined French and Spanish fleets at Trafalgar and thus sealed the doom of the first and great Napoleon.

The new King's father, the late King George V—a "second son," like himself, not in direct line of accession—was also known as "the sailor king."

Though he participated in no history-making engagements on the ocean as did his descendant,

Britain's "Sailor King," George VI, as he appears in naval attire. Trained to the sea from infancy by his nautically inclined father, George V, the new King was a hero in the battle of Jutland as a youth.

MAYOR, COUNCILLOR MELLEN NEAR BLOWS

MANSFIELD IN ROW OVER DAVE SHAW

Mayor Mansfield ordered him to get out of his office, and for a while, it looked as though blows might be exchanged, City Councillor James J. Mellen of Charlestown told City Hall reporters today.

The quarrel, according to Mellen, broke out as a result of his telling Mayor Mansfield that "some people think that Dave Shaw is Mayor of Boston."

Reporters heard angry voices in the mayoral chamber while Mellen was inside and were told the councillor's version when he appeared.

"IN CONFERENCE"

Mayor Mansfield, when his version was sought, was reported "in conference."

Mellen said that he went in to see the mayor in the hope of securing an explanation of a statement made by David B. Shaw, chairman of the election commission.

Chairman Shaw, according to the councillor, charged him with having broken an agreement to vote for President John I. Fitzgerald of the council last fall.

DENIAL BY MAYOR

That, Mellen said, was supposed to be the reason why Mellen could not secure Works Progress Administration jobs for Charlestown constituents.

"Mayor Mansfield told me," Mellen quoted Shaw, "that you broke your promise to vote for Fitzgerald, and voted for Martin H. Tobin of Dorchester. You are not entitled to any patronage."

As a result of Shaw's statement, the councilor said, he confronted the Mayor and Mansfield denied the remarks adding:

"Dave Shaw isn't the mayor."

"Well, some people think so," Mellen said he retorted.

"Get out of this office and stay out," the mayor told me. I answered that I believed Shaw's story. He shouted at me again: "Get out! Get out!" So I left."

Building the European War Machine With American Money

THE shifty and evasive British note in answer to our State Department's reminder that on December 15, 1936, England is due to pay an instalment on her debt to us is characteristic of the attitude for the last three years of both France and Great Britain on this question.

"HIS MAJESTY'S GOVERNMENT," says the British note, "WILL BE READY TO REOPEN DISCUSSIONS ON THE MATTER WHENEVER CIRCUMSTANCES ARE SUCH AS TO WARRANT THE HOPE THAT A SATISFACTORY RESULT MIGHT BE REACHED."

The tone of this answer, besides being shifty and evasive, is almost insulting, for it needs no great analytical gift to read this between the lines:

"WE'LL TALK BUSINESS TO YOU IF WE FEEL LIKE IT WHEN YOU COME TO OUR TERMS."

This is the tone of a nation that NOW BOASTS OF HER PROSPERITY but is deliberately de-

POPE IN GREAT PAIN BUT HE CARRIES ON

Vatican City, Dec. 14 (AP)—Attendants of Pope Pius XI said today the circulatory stagnation, which has caused the Holy Father intense pain in moving his legs, has been complicated by a grave varicose condition in the left leg.

Well-informed sources said that while the 79-year-old Pontiff's condition was not such as to eliminate "every apprehension," these apprehensions were not imminent.

The Pope's doctors said his tenacious will had been his "best remedy" during the past few days.

READS BOOK ON WAR

The Holy Father read himself to sleep last night with a book written by Marshal Emilio deBono and Pietro Badoglio on the Ethiopian war.

He sat up for several hours yesterday transacting affairs of the church with Eugenio Cardinal Pacelli, papal secretary of state.

Vatican authorities disclosed the Catholic Church was developing vast anti-Communist activity throughout the world through bishops, priests and the laymen's organization, Catholic Action.

DIRECTS WORLD FIGHT

The Pope attacked the spread of communism early in the Spanish civil war in an address to refugees of the church from Spain.

An official said the Pope himself was the director of the world-wide Catholic fight against communism and that a plan for a special organization to fight communism had been broached.

This organization, it has been suggested, would be based on the "Pro Deo" committees, composed of both Catholics and Protestants, which already exist in many European countries.

Condenser Leak Delays Queen Mary

New York, Dec. 14 (AP)—Loaded with 11,263 sacks of Christmas mail, the liner Queen Mary was delayed about eight hours in docking today.

Cunard-White Star line officials said the delay was caused by a leaky condenser tube which necessitated shutting down some of the giant ship's boilers.

EDWARD WILL VISIT EAR SPECIALIST

The Great Love Story

VIENNA—Former King Edward rests at the Tyrolean lodge of Baron Eugene Rothschild, and telephones for 23 minutes to Mrs. Wally Simpson. He will see an ear doctor today.

CANNES—Mrs. Wally Simpson is reported to have definitely decided it is best to remain away from her royal fiance so as not to jeopardize her divorce decree. A French detective declares she has been virtually a prisoner since her flight and until Edward left England.

LONDON—King George VI works all of his birthday as England, amazed, widely discusses the unprecedented radio rebuke administered by the Archbishop of Canterbury to Edward and the "social set" with which he was identified. Meanwhile, the "Public Informer" withdrew his petition to block Mrs. Simpson's divorce.

'THE REAL MRS. SIMPSON'

Adela Rogers St. Johns, famous woman author and analyst of women's loves and men's hearts, in today's chapter of her brilliant and moving story of "THE REAL MRS. SIMPSON," finds the King's farewell, his public pronouncement to the world that he MUST have "the woman I love," was the greatest heart-throb in the greatest love story of this or of any other time. Vienna, Dec. 14—Enjoying the luxury of the palatial Castle Enzesfeld after his rapid dash from London, the Duke of Windsor slept late today and then made a 23-minute telephone call to Mrs. Wallis Simpson at Cannes, France—the woman for whom he renounced Britain's throne.

Afterwards he took a short stroll through the castle park and expressed hopes, it was reported, of an opportunity for a round of golf.

CHINESE PREMIER SAFE; MUTINEERS' CHIEF SEIZED

CIVIL WARFARE SCHEME LAID TO SOVIET

BULLETIN

Peiping, Dec. 14 (INS)—Dramatically turning the tables, loyal troops of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek today released him from his anti-Japanese captors in Sianfu and arrested Marshal Chang Hsueh-Liang, rebel leader who kidnaped the Chinese premier on Saturday, according to private messages received here.

Chiang Kai-Shek immediately started out for Nanking, the messages stated.

By The Associated Press

The amazing seizure of Chiang Kai-Shek, China's powerful overlord, by the rebellious young marshall, Chang Hsueh-Liang, threatened civil war today with international reverberations calculated to create an "Oriental Spain."

Nanking—Troop trains, reacutbound, rumbled toward Sianfu, capital of Shensi Province, where Generalissimo Chiang was held. The Nanking government, however, still worked at a possible peaceful solution of the crisis.

Tokyo—Japan and Germany, anti-Communist allies, consulted while observers connected the Communist International of Moscow was behind Marshal Chang, one-time warlord of Manchuria, now Japanese-sponsored Manchoukuo.

They said an alliance between Chang and the Communist armies he was supposed to have been fighting had opened up "a red route to North Central China."

Japanese news dispatches also said his vanguard of rescue troops had reached within 30 miles and that eight Chinese government divisions were poised for a general attack on Chang's rear.

SHANGHAI—The stock market was closed, due to the crisis in the north.

MOSCOW—The government press denied that Soviet Russia was involved in the revolt in China, and hinted that Marshal Chang Hsueh-liang was the tool of "Japanese provocateurs," despite the fact he is demanding war on Japan in personal letters to the Nanking government.

BERLIN—Chiang's son was informed officially that the generalissimo still lives.

Japan Consults Hitler On Russia

Tokyo, Dec. 14 (AP)—Tokyo consulted Germany, anti-Communist ally, today, on reports the Komintern was behind the amazing seizure of Chiang Kai-Shek.

Eight divisions of the Chinese central army, said Japanese dispatches from the mainland, were poised to assault Sianfu, capital of Shensi Province, which is presumed to be the place where Chiang Kai-Shek was held.

Germany, to whom Japan is bound by a newly-announced anti-Communist accord, was consulted quickly by the Tokyo regime.

The press said there was indisputable proof the Communist International had instigated the seizure of Generalissimo Chiang and his generals.

Military observers said the coup d'etat would have been impossible unless Marshal Chang, former warlord of Manchuria, had formed an alliance with the Communist leaders he was supposed to have been fighting.

The reports from China said four government divisions would advance on Sianfu, capital of Shensi and four others from Kansi when War Minister Ho Ying-Ching arrives there.

A major engagement was believed imminent in the neighborhood of Tungkwan, on the Hwang Ho river, where Shansi, Shensi and Honan provinces meet.

If Chang's reported alliance with Chinese Communist troops were true, military observers asserted the marshal would have a formidable army.

Russia Accuses Japan Of Directing Coup

Moscow, Dec. 14 (AP)—The authoritative newspaper Pravda declared today Japanese charges the Soviet was involved in Marshal Chang Hsiao-Liang's revolt against the Chinese government and counter-charged that Japan was directing the coup.

The "key of the Chinese crisis brought about by the capture of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek by Chang dominated all Moscow papers.

The situation was treated as gravely important.

"The Chinese masses will not permit this move," Pravda said.

"The imperialistic policy of Tokyo's aggressors will once more open the eyes of the Chinese masses to the intentions of Tokyo to further enslave the great Chinese people.

"The Soviet government remains devoted to its policy of strict non-intervention in foreign states."

Pravda said that while it might appear Marshal Chang was raising his hands against the Japanese by is "actually helping Japan to further smother or his country.

Chiang Wife Wellesley Graduate

News of the kidnaping and imprisonment of Chiang Kai-Shek, Chinese military dictator, and subsequent communication with his wife assuring his safety, is of more than passing interest to Bostonians in general and Wellesley graduates in particular.

For to many it will bring back memories of a bright-eyed, studious, beautiful little Chinese college student who captured the hearts of Wellesley undergraduates during her four years there, and returned to her native land thoroughly "Americanized."

ALWAYS WITH CHINESE

Then she was simply Mayling Olive Soong, of one of China's most respected families. Now she is Mme. Chiang Kai-Shek, wife of the Chinese ex-president and warlord for whose safety she fears.

Wellesleyites are today recalling their experiences with the vivacious Mayling Olive Soong, who entered the college as a plain little Oriental and left there with an aura of popularity about her head and the toasts of all Chinese college men east of the Mississippi ringing in her ears.

Mayling entered into college life with a zest. She never missed Harvard football games or after-game dinners. Her "dates" were numerous, but always with Chinese students.

WORKS WITH MATE

There was not a Wellesley activity that Mayling did not enter with a love for fun usually alien to foreign students in American schools.

Yet she always found time to studiously follow the progress and history of her own China and placed a reverential importance on some of the customs she had been brought up to observe.

When she returned to China she met the dashing Chiang Kai-Shek, who had dedicated his life to ridding his country of the Communist menace. They were married despite the objections of Mayling's family, who thought she was "losing caste" by the union.

Since her marriage she has stuck heroically by the side of her husband through all his travail, putting thoughts of her American adventure in the background for the sake of realizing a "unified China."

Americanized

Mme. Chiang Kai-Shek, known in Boston and Wellesley as Mayling Olive Soong, who became "Americanized" here.

MAXWELL TRIAL NEARS END

Wise, Va., Dec. 14 (INS)—In an atmosphere tense with excitement, the final phase of the murder trial of pretty Edith Maxwell, 22, accused of killing her father, started today.

Spectators packed the tiny courtroom with the prospect of seeing the mountain school teacher, who was convicted and sentenced to 25 years in prison at her first trial, testify in her own defense as she did at her last trial, the indings o which were overruled by the State Appelate court.

While the prosecution has attempted to show Trigg Maxwell, a blacksmith, was killed in July, 135, by blows Edith administered on her head with her slipper heel, the defense produced testimony of three coroners which tended to refute the State's claim the blows on the head caused his death.

REBELS EXPECT WINTER SIEGE

Madrid, Dec. 14 (AP)—The Socialist defense Junta ordered complete reorganization today of its militia forces in preparation for a bitter winter siege.

While insurgent batteries threw occasional shells into the city, the defense forces were converted into "perfect" army units, the government said.

Faced with the probability the insurgent siege would last throughout the winter cold, the government planned the reorganization to obtain strict discipline among the militia units.

There was little activity on the entire Madrid front.

Sporadic outbursts of rifle and machine gun fire and a slight artillery bombardment were the only sounds that broke the sinister silence.

Italian Objections Blow to Spain Peace

French workmen would not unload the cargo, they sympathized with strikers in America, although they had defied their unions.

The French ship Champlain came to New York, and regular union labor in the docks refused to unload the Champlain because Frenchmen had refused to unload an American ship. The Champlain went back with her cargo of Christmas merchandise.

Last Saturday with another cargo she prepared to sail from France and was prevented by a sudden strike in her crew, with demands for a large increase in pay, following other increases last summer. On the same Saturday Mussolini's Italian Rex sailed from New York, was delayed by a crowd of 5000 that came to see their friends. Italy's boats go back and forth regularly, no strikes. Mussolini takes care of that; he does all the striking, and his method certainly helps business, while it lasts.

With too many individuals able to fix up factories, railroads, ships, electric light, water and food supply, progress might be slow. It might even be necessary to do something about it.

faulting on the regular instalment of $117,670,765 plus $668,474,701 arrears on a $5,000,000,000 debt.

WHAT are the "circumstances" referred to in this note that will warrant "a satisfactory result" —SATISFACTORY TO WHOM?

TO THE DEBTOR, OF COURSE—TO ENGLAND, who apparently has no real intention of paying her just debt to this country.

This is fully evidenced by the following paragraph in the same note:

"I (the British Ambassador) AM TO THANK YOU FOR YOUR ASSURANCE THAT THE UNITED STATES GOVERNMENT IS FULLY DISPOSED TO DISCUSS ANY PROPOSALS WHICH HIS MAJESTY'S GOVERNMENT MAY DECIDE TO PUT FORWARD IN REGARD TO THIS INDEBTEDNESS."

Here is express acknowledgment that our government was ready to listen to proposals from England on the defaulted debt.

The answer is:

"YOU'LL WAIT TILL WE JOLLY WELL GET READY!"

So much for one prosperous debt-welcher.

FRANCE is playing the same What-Are-You-Going-To-Do-About-It game as England, but with a touch of that added Gallic hypocrisy which diplomats and other masters of word-masquerading call POLITESSE.

On December 15 dear old Marianne will default to the tune of $22,308,312 plus arrears of $325,000,000.

She lately offered a "feeler" to settle with us—A PROMISE, A GALLIC PROMISE—of paying ONE-EIGHTH of her debt stretched over a period of TWENTY YEARS.

But in 1917 and 1918 when we saved France and England from practical annihilation we Americans did NOT send them ONE-EIGHTH of our Army or ONE-EIGHTH of our Navy or ONE-EIGHTH of anything.

We gave in men and treasure to the limit, and in return for a combined $9,000,000,000 debt we get mealy-mouthed "notes" and POLITESSE.

FRANCE has voted $200,000,000 to strengthen her navy.

She has spent billions in fortifications and air defenses.

England is spending three-fourths of her revenues in war preparations.

The major financial problem now in England and France is how to wheedle us into repealing the Johnson law, have us declare all debts off and, in case of war, empty our treasury into their laps.

This is no doubt what England means by a "satisfactory result" in her note and France means by her "feeler" of a PROMISE to pay one-eighth of her debt in twenty years—when there will probably be nothing left of Europe but ruins.

SENATOR BORAH in recently commenting on the French "feeler" said:

"WE WOULD HAVE NO ASSURANCE THAT THEY WOULD PAY IF THE DEBTS WERE SCALED DOWN TO TEN CENTS ON THE DOLLAR. THIS MONEY BELONGS TO THE AMERICAN TAXPAYER."

This American taxpayer will pay to the government on December 15 millions of dollars on his income tax quarterly instalment. He MUST pay it or face fine and imprisonment.

But on that same day the instalment-welchers of Europe will laugh in our face—with English circumlocution and French POLITESSE.

MISS MARGARET NORRIS
Has a Good Right Foot

Eighteen-year-old Margaret Norris of Roslindale probably never in her life saw a pair of agile Frenchmen engaged in the good old Gallic game of "la savate"—which is a continental custom of settling differences without boxing gloves.

But somewhere today a youth in a red ski cap must have nursed a lump on the jaw and maybe a black eye or two, wondering whether or not he collided with the world champion savateur.

Miss Norris and a girl friend, Edith Johnson, also 18, and of Roslindale, were walking along Westmoreland street, Roxbury, when the red-capped youth accosted them.

As he made a lunge for Miss Johnson, the Norris girl swung with her right foot, landing a flush on the would-be hugger and breaking his hold on her friend and dropping him for a short count.

So long as the hugger wasn't using Margaret's shoulders rules neither did Miss Norris. She used the right foot a few more times to advantage on the fallen foe. He didn't wait for more. He ran.

The girls, who live in Coniston road, Roslindale, gave police a description of the assailant—including the possible black eyes.

SANTA Outwits DEATH

DOOMED BOYS RECEIVE TOYS

Kansas City, Dec. 14 (AP)—Santa Claus set his calendar ahead today for two tiny sufferers from what doctors say are incurable diseases—just to make sure death doesn't overtake them before they enjoy their first ecstatic tastes of Christmas.

Charles Mendenhall, 5, in a Kansas City hospital, and Johnny Hernandez, 3, in an Omaha hospital, revelled in new-found thrills, unaware their beds may be empty when Santa makes his regular rounds.

Does Not Know

Nurses learned recently that neither child—both from poor families—ever had heard of Christmas, or else had forgotten about it.

So in Omaha today, Johnny smiled through his pain, gazing at a glittering Christmas tree, unwrapping marvelous toys. He does not know he has cancer of the bone, that doctors expect him to die before Christmas.

At Mercy Hospital here, Charles pedaled around his room as fast as his weakened little legs would permit on a new tricycle, never dreaming doctors had expected him to die a month ago.

Death Ensues

He has pemphigus, a disease that gradually covers the body with burn-like blisters.

When the blisters spread far enough death ensues.

There will be more gifts and celebration for Charles on Christmas Day—if the blisters haven't spread too far. But he had the tricycle today because an unnamed mother read of his case. She knew what might happen. She bought the tricycle for her own son, she told nurses—but death arrived before Santa Claus.

Girl, 12, Faces Fourth Christmas in Hospital

Grand Rapids, Mich., Dec. 14 (AP)—Twelve-year-old Dorothy Smith faced today the possibility of spending her third Christmas day out of the last four in a hospital because of her 14th major bone fracture.

The little Muskegon, Mich., school girl slipped on the front steps of her home yesterday and broke her right leg. For several years Dorothy averaged but one fracture each year but in 1936 she broke three bones.

Street Sweeper Robbed by Autoists

Frank Finelli, 53-year-old operator of a Newton street sweeping machine was routed to the cleaners himself today by two holdup men.

Finelli was driving the sweeper on Chestnut street, Newton, when two men drove up in a car and asked directions. As he stepped away from the machine, one of the pair leveled a revolver at him, while the other frisked his pockets of $2 and a package of cigarettes.

Brothers Awarded Eagle Scout Honor

Fall River, Dec. 14—Lawrence and Alfred Whittaker, sons of Fireman Thomas Whittaker, both held the coveted rank of Eagle Scout today, only brothers in the district to earn the honor.

MICKEY MOUSE QUITS SINGING

SILENT SINCE HE WET FEET

Woodstock, Ill., Dec. 14 (AP)—The golden voice of Mickey, the singing mouse, was stilled today because he got his feet wet.

The result was either a cold or a case of artistic temperament—they weren't sure which over at the Industrial Home for Children—but at any rate he moped in his cage, refusing to trill a note.

Mickey was in good voice yesterday morning. He sang for the children at breakfast, starting off with a soft whirring trill, building up to a crescendo. Superintendent Herbert C. Genzch said, then jumping two notes higher for another crescendo.

But in the afternoon Mickey got his front paws soaked while drinking water from a fruit jar lid. And thereafter he was as silent as an oyster.

Manager Oscar Allred captured the mouse Thursday. It escaped Friday when Allred sought to transfer it from a fruit jar to a wire cage.

They locked up the house rat and after a 24-hour search cornered Mickey in the pantry. The mouse promptly ran up Genzch's sleeve, dived down his back and made a speedway of his waistline.

Mickey sped around and around until Genzch inserted the open end of a fruit jar in the shirt front. The mouse ran inside.

Mickey is two inches long, has big ears, a tail three-fourths of an inch longer than his body and is gray with a white stomach, which vibrates when he "sings."

Police, P. O. Chiefs to Attend Rites for Wm. McClare

A delegation of police and postal officials will attend funeral services for William H. McClare, 72, of West street, West Roxbury, at the Holy Name Church, West Roxbury, tomorrow morning.

McClare, a letter carrier for 48 years attached to the Essex postal station, died at City Hospital yesterday. He had been retired five years.

He was a resident of West Roxbury all his life and had many friends in the police department. He was the father-in-law of Detective John J. Hanrotte.

Police Commissioner Joseph F. Timilty, Superintendent Edward W. Fallon, and Deputy Superintendent James R. Claffin will lead the police delegation. Acting Postmaster Peter F. Tague will also attend.

McClare is survived by three daughters, Miss Alice McClare, Mrs. Bella O'Connor, and Mrs. Margaret Hanrotte.

FIREMEN RESCUE ROXBURY BABY

Girl, 2, Locked Self In Bathroom

Baby Joan Berman, aged two, of 126 Seaver street, Roxbury, has clean hands and a twinkle in her eye today. Yesterday she locked herself in the bathroom after assuring mother she was old enough to wash her own hands. That part was all right, but it took police and firemen to rescue her after she discovered that love may laughe at locksmiths but not little girls.

It was a family event today when little Joan Berman, 2, of 126 Seaver street, Roxbury, decided to wash her hands.

For yesterday Joan decided that she was perfectly capable of performing the operation all by herself. The washing itself went fine, but when she tried to unlock the door of the bathroom that proved one step too much for a two-year-old.

Mother and father shouted directions through the door. Joan toyed bravely with the key but the door wouldn't open.

In desperation her father, Benjamin Berman, called the police who in turn, decided they needed help, and summoned firemen, who gained entrance with a ladder.

So today, when Joan, with a twinkle in her eye, noticed that her hands were dirty, mother was right inside her.

Low-Numbered Auto Plates in Mails

Several thousand persons, holders of lower number automobile plates, who had complained to insurance companies about not having received their same numbers for 1937 as yet, were assured today by Registrar of Motor Vehicles Frank A. Goodwin that the plates were in the mails.

Goodwin explained that the selection this year was caused by making an extra careful check of the list of persons again requesting low numbers.

He revealed at the same time that two wealthy men, for years holders of such lower number plates, will start themselves with higher numbers for 1937.

Both men were convicted of drunken driving during the year, Goodwin stated, and then sought to keep their low numbers by registering their cars in the name of some relatives after the first charges recalled the plates.

One of the men is the present proprietor of a one, number, plate and the other one of three numbers, Goodwin said.

The plates under the 10,000 figure, Goodwin said, were mailed on Friday and everyone was requested such number should get it in the mail no later than today.

Son of President Better, May Spend Yule at Home

Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr., son of the President, was reported resting "very comfortably" today at Phillips House of Massachusetts General Hospital, where he is confined suffering from sinus trouble.

He was visited for more than an hour today by his physician, Dr. George L. Tobey, Jr.

Dr. Tobey stated young Roosevelt's condition was very much improved and that there was some question now whether he would be forced to undergo an operation.

The President's son was ridden of the grippe and his temperature was normal, his physician stated. If an operation is not performed it is likely that he will be able to spend Christmas at the White House.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was back in Washington today after another flying visit here yesterday to visit her son.

Another visitor was the patient's fiancee, Miss Ethel du Pont, who will remain in Boston until young Roosevelt's departure from the hospital and then will accompany him to Washington.

Harrison, 82, Dies; Son of President

Indianapolis, Dec. 14 (AP)—Russell R. Harrison, 82, son of former President Benjamin Harrison and a great-grandson of former President William Henry Harrison, died here yesterday. He had suffered from heart disease.

Mr. Harrison, a great-great-grandson of Benjamin Harrison, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence, had been active in legal work until his death. He served in the Indiana House of Representatives and also in the state Senate.

METAL BLANKET TOO HOT

Inventor Steamed Up, Foiled by Device

Dayton, O., Dec. 14 (AP)—A middle-aged Dayton inventor had a complaint to make today against his latest wrinkle—an aluminum bed blanket.

"Doggone it," said Otto Murray Summers, "the trouble is, I can't get it thin enough so it won't smother you!"

Summers, credited by the patent office with the invention of a temperature-control device widely used in electrical refrigeration, has found, he says, a new use for aluminum foil.

Aside from its claimed advantages as an article of bed clothing, he already has received suggestions as to its adaptability for use in the manufacture of high-altitude flying togs incubator-insulation or wherever body heat can be employed as the heat-generating unit.

The Summers blanket looks much like a fancy bed-spread than it does the familiar cotton or woolen article.

"But there again," Summers said, "the material has got to be pretty thin or you begin to 'steam' after a few minutes with it."

The single paper-thin sheet of specially-treated aluminum foil is so warm, the experimenter contended, that he has had to provide ventilation by cutting it into narrow strips, holding the whole in place by stitching or netting.

Summers said the blanket's advantages are that it is easily laundered, is extremely light in weight, and it easily folds into small space.

LIFE STORY OF ENGLAND'S NEW KING

By Hudson Hawley

George VI Is Third Sailor Monarch In 107 Years

he devoted all the years of his early manhood to the routine duties of a British naval officer.

He visited many of the empire's far flung possessions, keeping his crews fit and ready for duty at a moment's notice.

Even in late middle age, King George could mount the bridge of a modern battleship, maneuver her like a professional, and with her lead a mighty fleet to safe anchorage.

King George VI may not be able to duplicate that feat, because ill health obliged him to leave the navy some 19 years ago; but on those fateful days of June, 1916, when the German high seas fleet had at last come out to do battle with the British grand fleet, he certainly knew how to lose a gun crew, get the maximum of fire out of the guns in his turret, and the maximum of accuracy, to inspire the blue jackets under him by his coolness, poise and contempt for danger.

Prince Albert, as he was then known, was a sub-lieutenant aboard H. M. S. Collingwood, the battle cruiser named after one of Nelson's famous captains.

The Collingwood gave an excellent account of herself in the Jutland battle.

Not only did she put out of action the German battleship Derflinger, which had accounted for several British craft, and ward off a torpedo attack, but her staff work in the passing on of signals was one of the outstanding features of the crucial encounter.

The prince was "mentioned in dispatches" for his conduct.

Had he not been the King's second son, and had the admiralty not known his Majesty's insistence that he be treated like any other young officer without birth or title, the chances are he would have been decorated.

Be that as it may, he will be the first British monarch since his faraway ancestor, King George II, actually to have braved enemy fire in open battle. George II fought on the field of Dettingen, in the first half of the 18th century.

George 41 Today

To be sure the new King's brother, the retiring Edward VIII, begged and pleaded to be assigned to front line duty during the late war; but Kitchener and the war ministers who succeeded him consistently refused to allow the heir to the throne to run the risk of being killed or, worse, being taken prisoner.

Edward, of course, as a young staff officer, was many times under serious bombardment, and risked his life often; but, through no fault of his own, he never had the chance to pull a lanyard or order a broadside, as did his younger brother.

The more one examines the life record of Albert Frederick Arthur George, the new King of England, who was 41 today, the more one is impressed with his likeness to his great-grandfather, Albert, Prince of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, that sagacious German who was the much-loved consort of his great-grandmother, Queen Victoria.

Though Albert is a British sailor, aviator, and sporting country gentleman to the manner born, those traits which may be called intrinsically German stand out in his character like italicized type—regularity, punctuality, blind devotion to duty, unyielding stubbornness in overcoming physical and other defects, and above all in his love for a quiet, well ordered family life.

He has one great quality in common with Albert, the Prince consort, which, in the family of the ex-Kaiser, at least, has more than once been lacking—that of tact.

And perhaps, after all, in these days when constitutional monarchs must obey their parliaments and peoples, tact is a far safer attribute than brilliant genius.

Drilled Early

King George VI had as his first drillmaster none other than his father, George V, who then bore the title of Duke of York.

That doughty little sailor-man, who always preferred a quarter-deck to a throne room, used to put him and his older brother through the manual of arms, close order drill, saluting, eyes-righting, and all the rest of it as soon as they were able to toddle.

When the new King's grandfather, Edward VII, ascended the throne in 1901—Albert was then barely six—the future King, George V, had a real brig-o'war, named the Edward VII, brought all the way inland to Virginia water, near Windsor Castle, so that his boys might learn to go up aloft in the rigging, holystone decks, sling hammocks, and learn all the nomenclature of a real naval vessel.

Linguist

By the time they were ready for admission to the Royal Naval School of Osborne, at the tender ages of 13 and 12, respectively, Edward and "Bertie" were well ahead of their contemporaries in "the school of the bluejacket," no matter how deficient they might have been in such mundane subjects as algebra.

The new King's schooling was of the thorough, German kind.

He received a sound teaching in languages, as was necessary on account of his many Teutonic relatives and the frequency with which foreign French-speaking visitors of note came into his parents' home.

To this day he devotes several luncheon periods a week to correcting little Princess Elizabeth's French and German pronunciation and grammar.

That is one of the burns of royal childhood: A Prince or Princess must study languages for perfection and not merely for a passing mark. But, despite a tendency to stutter, which by sheer will and grit he has now conquered, the new King George in the course of the years has made himself quite a proficient linguist.

That is why, in the course of the past twelve years or so, he has been so frequently chosen to represent his late father and his mother at weddings, coronations and other ceremonies in far-off countries, such as those of Central Europe, the Balkans, and Italy.

Edward (or David, as he was always known in the family circle), and Bertie had to keep their royal young noses to the grindstone while they were in school.

They had only one-half holiday a week, on Saturday.

However, the aforesaid contemporaries weren't being trained to be kings or princes but merely bankers and plumbers and bond salesmen.

Playtime there was, to be sure, and right hard play at that.

Football, field hockey, and other rough sports when the family was at Sandringham, in Norfolk, with boys of their own age, regardless of their families' connections, as opponents.

At Windsor, in other seasons, cricket was the mainstay.

Boy Scout

Bertie was at first slow to learn that complicated pastime of the thoroughly English, but with true teutonic stubbornness applied himself to it so earnestly that after a few years he was able to bowl out both his father and his big brother.

The late King George was the first monarch in history to sense the importance of the Boy Scout movement, and to give it his official backing.

Soon after his accession, when Albert was barely 15, he sent both his eldest boys to camp, clad in the khaki kit that has been since worn by so many millions of youngsters the world over, and had them learn the lore of the woods, the art of applying first aid, and the far more difficult one of camp cooking.

When Albert, after the war, became Duke of York and had an establishment of his own, one of his first acts was to institute scout camps under his own patronage, and to insist that the sons of the poor, the middle class and the well-to-do should be admitted on a basis of perfect equality.

From time to time, as much as his official duties would permit, he joined in their camp life, clad in shorts and open neck shirts, and evidently enjoyed it.

When Albert was barely five, his parents left him and Edward in charge of nurses and governesses while they made a 50,000 mile cruise, lasting seven months, aboard the Ophir, to visit Australia, New Zealand, South Africa and other dominions.

Though "Bertie" was known as "the shy one" of the family, it is on record that he stood the ordeal well, and never whimpered about not having mummy there to tuck him in at night and hear him say his prayers.

Kiss on Cheek

Perhaps the greatest thrill Albert received as a growing boy was his attendance on his father's coronation in 1911, when he was barely 15 and a half.

There, in that scene of imposing medieval pageantry, he followed his elder brother in making his genuflection to the doughty little man who was not only his father but his King and his liege-lord.

After Edward had, solemnly, read out the lines of his oath of allegiance, Albert, somewhat awkwardly, repeated them, then mounted the steps of the throne, and followed out the ritual of kissing his father on his cheek, and at the same time reverently touching the crown with his right hand.

Little did the young sub-midshipman, as he then was, dream that a bare 26 years later, he—so far removed from the succession, as he thought—would be destined to sit upon the same throne, wear that same crown, and receive the same delicate homage from his pretty little daughter, Princess Elizabeth. One would give far more than the traditional penny for Prince Albert's thoughts on that grandiose occasion.

CHAPTER V

I suppose as long as we live, my heart and your heart will carry within them, vibrant to some touch, the farewell of King Edward the VIII to his far-flung empire.

The flag of England, whipped by the winds of the world from Trafalgar square to the farthest outpost of the great dominion, must have dipped low as that gallant voice broke upon "God Bless You All," and then rang like a trumpet, "God Save the King."

Brother to brother, from the man who had been King to the man who would be King.

All for a woman. All for Wallis of America.

"You must believe me," said His Royal Highness Prince Edward of Windsor—for by blood he must always be a Prince of that royal house no matter if he has stripped himself of every wordly title and honor. "You must believe me when I tell you I have found it impossible to carry the heavy burden of responsibility and to discharge my duty as King as I would wish to do without the help and support of the woman I love."

At long last, as he himself said, we have heard from his own lips, we the listening world, his declaration of the greatest love of our time, or any other time.

And for us at this moment it cannot matter very much whether he was right or wrong to give up his throne for a woman.

As Prime Minister Baldwin said to Parliament, "we cannot judge. We do not judge our King. We are not judgers."

If that man, who represents the British people as head of the government, can say that, if his own people blacken the streets and cheer him and weep with him and for him as he drives for the last time through the streets of London, I think we may stand aside from judging.

Torture Behind Decision

Whether his decision is right or wrong, it is the decision itself, the terrific mental torture and heartbreak behind it, the weeks of struggle within his soul who for 25 years had served his country ably and well and devotedly, and the cause of this momentous and world-stirring decision which must absorb us as human beings.

"The woman I love . . . .

"The other person most concerned has tried to take the last to persuade me to take a different course."

So in his own throbbing words, we heard confirmed what I told you some days ago that Wallis Simpson had tried in every way, was trying up to the last, to persuade him to keep his throne, that she offered to give him up, that she returned to him any promise he had made her, that she cut any tie of honor which he might have felt bound him to her since he had openly announced his desire to marry her.

That is true.

That she meant it, I know.

And I know that her offer of renunciation, made after sleepless nights of tears and prayers, cost her as much as the King's final renunciation cost him.

That is the real Mrs. Simpson.

That is the woman behind the glitter and glamour and tense world excitement, the woman behind the thousands of beautiful photographs we have seen of her, the real woman who listened to that radio farewell to his people by her future husband with a command in tears and stammered sobs, whose little hands covered and tried to silence her broken, "Oh, no, no."

She Shares 'Failure'

They have moved a new throne into the House of Lords.

When Edward the bachelor King ascended to the highest place in the empire, they removed the throne upon which Queen Mary had sat, and only one stood there.

Upon a throne beside the lonely one that belonged to him, Edward, R. I., wanted another one, and upon it he wanted to place Wallis—Queen Wallis.

But it wasn't for the American woman they brought back the regal chair of Queen Mary.

It was for the English girl, a commoner also, the now reigning Queen of England, Elizabeth. Wallis Simpson never will sit upon a throne now.

I do not think she cares.

It is only her dark, deep sense of guilt which at moments overcomes her that today shadows her life, as she sits in the villa at Cannes, waiting for the day when she and her lover may be together again.

And that sense of guilt is not for their love, but that, perhaps, in loving him, in his love for her, she has been part of his failure in his duty, that her love has cost him too much, that his sacrifice for her has been too great.

Naturally, she wanted to be Queen.

Naturally, she wanted him to keep his throne and to share it, in some way or another, so that she might give him that help and support of which he spoke—and also enjoy the glory and beauty of ruling England with him.

It would be idiotic to say she didn't.

Her eyes were dazzled by such a vision.

To be the first American upon the throne of the British Empire, to be called Your Majesty by bowing subjects, to be the Queen of the most popular King in British history is a dream few women could resist.

Now she will be Mrs. Edward David Windsor and share the social life of the new King, George VI, bestowed upon his adored older brother who for so many years completely overshadowed him.

Probably it is a disappointment.

But she, more than anyone else, knows why the King gave up his throne.

Probably she more than anyone else, being his close confidante and friend in all things as well as the woman he loves, understands his thoughts.

It may have been to her that, as he restlessly paced up and down his great rooms at Belvedere, he poured out his many fears and dilemma.

If he fought to keep his throne against the staid, powerful elements that disapproved his marriage, might he not throw the whole Empire, at a crucial moment, into internal uproar, into something less than a United Kingdom?

He always has been a fighter. Has fought for his own independence and the betterment of his people. He went into the trenches when the powers had ordered him not to go.

He flew airplanes when his government protested wildly. He fought for better living conditions for the poor and better hours for the working man.

He rode horses and jumped them dangerously until his mother, Her Majesty, appealed to him not to take such risks for the sake of the people of England.

No one ever accused the Prince of Wales of lacking guts.

But I do not think he would risk a battle that might disturb the peace and solidity of the empire when the motive was a personal one of his own.

I think he gave up more titles than any man ever had, more possessions, rather than fight when that might bring about disaster.

He made the sacrifice rather than fight—and he asks us to believe—and if you heard him speak you had to believe, that he could no longer marry the crown without Wallis Simpson.

Her Divorce in the Way

That to do his job, that job, he had to have a wife beside him, and he said of his brother, now George VI, "and he has one matchless blessing enjoyed by so many of you and not bestowed upon me, a happy home with his wife and children."

But why—why—couldn't Wallis Simpson share the throne of England?

Because she was an American?

The British people would have welcomed an American Queen, welcomed that great alliance.

Because of her background? No American woman has a finer family tree.

Why was Wallis Warfield of Baltimore "unacceptable" as the Queen of England, and the British government insisted that if she was to be his wife she must also be his Queen?

Why was she "unacceptable," this beautiful, dignified, competent woman whom the King loved and by whom he was loved?

There is one answer and one answer only and we might as well face the truth.

Mrs. Simpson had been twice divorced.

A Queen of England, mother of her people, example to their youth, honored in every way that a people could be honored, could not have two other living husbands while the King of England was her husband.

It was for that reason and that alone that the government, the royal family, the Parliament and even the British people answered the King's request that he might marry her with a regretful "No," for they have always hated to deny the Prince of Wales anything.

So the things that stood between Wallis and a throne, the things that took Edward, from his people were the two marriages that Wallis had made before.

The exquisite wedding in the beautiful church in Baltimore when she, clad in panne velvet and pearls and old family laces, before a crowd of all that was the best in Southern society, became the bride of Lieutenant Karl Winfield Spencer.

That quiet and simple ceremony before a registrar in London when she was married to Ernest Simpson.

Marriages Normal Enough

Yet both those marriages were normal enough, and both times she obtained the divorces for acts that a woman could not bear and still keep love and self-respect. Both times she was the one who made the break.

One of them, the first one, was almost a war marriage. It was a romantic, youthful, excited wedding of a girl of 19, surrounded by naval pomp and picturesque uniforms. And it led her into far lands and strange places and much anguish and heartbreak as you will see.

The second was the attempt of a woman who had been on her own, who was weary of the battle against the world, and who hoped in a marriage of affection to find peace and security and companionship.

The years leading up to that first marriage are important.

She lived for a time with the Warfields again and was sent to the best schools.

She was not a good student. Didn't care much for books. Smart enough but not specially interested.

She was a southern girl, remember, and not particularly interested in higher education.

Poetry she loved and read deeply.

English was her forte, and she wasn't bad at languages though she wasn't at all outstanding, and it is only in the years of her travels that she has perfected her French, which up until then was such plain ordinary high-school girl French and nothing to rave about.

The girls liked her, and she made some close friends who have stayed with her through life, such as Mary Kirk Raffray. But to describe her as having dazzled the school with her beauty and brains is ridiculous.

Nor was she any angel as far as her demeanor went.

She wrote letters to boys when it was against the rules, she brought home from her vacation visits to her mother forbidden things to eat, she romped and played out of order and once broke a window.

Most American girls in boarding schools have done all those things.

As far as I can find out there was only one thing that distinguished her in her school days only one thing that made "pretty little Bessie Wallis Warfield" different from you or me or any of a million girls who went to school between 1910 and 1920.

That was her really astounding flair for clothes, her complete understanding of how to dress her own particular type of loveliness.

One story will illustrate that completely.

When she was about 17, I think—my mathematics are so bad that I may make mistakes in exact times; do you mind?—anyhow it was after she was out of school and before she made her debut—and what a story that is!—so she must have been around 17.

The great ambition of the young girl who was to become the most famous woman in the world was to go to a Princeton prom. But she didn't know anybody at Princeton except her cousin, Basil Gordon. And he was a freshman.

Moreover, he wasn't interested at all in proms and girls. He was a student, a real student, with a brilliant and amazing genius for mathematics, of all things on earth.

He hated the spotlight or anything to do with it as much as his Aunt Bessie Merrymaker and will probably cut the throat of the Princeton fellow student who told me this if he ever finds out who he was.

At Point of Gun

Anyhow, Wallis went to her Cousin Leila, Basil's mother, and confided to her her great longing to be a prom girl.

And Cousin Leila, who loved balls and dances and everything pretty and exciting and feminine, wrote to her son and demanded a prom invitation for Cousin Wallis.

Now Basil, as the mathematical wizard of the school, was "coaching" half the senior class—and they had to have him.

So young Cousin Basil, infuriated with this frivolous interruption of his important pursuits in calculus and logarithms, went to a handsome and important senior and said frankly and brutally, "Either you'll take my cousin Wallis to the prom or I won't do your math any more."

Well, the poor senior who had a date of his own and whose imagination pictured Basil's cousin as a student like himself and therefore not apt to be much fun at a prom, had to consent.

It was at the point of a gun, practically.

The invitation arrived, and Wallis' mother and Wallis went into executive session.

The momentous question: "What shall I wear?"

Her mother was all for pink. Pink with ruffles and little roses. Or white, with blue ribbons. That was what all young girls in those days wore to proms.

But not Wallis Warfield.

She wore a deep sapphire blue, cut very simply to her lovely figure, with severely plain ribbons of American Beauty outlining the bodice and circling her slender waist.

In the galaxy of pretty girls in pink, white and pale blue, she was a standout—and the belle of the ball, much to the amazed delight of the drafted senior who took her.

Her debut—then that first marriage, which is a novel, a motion picture all by itself.

Leading up and up to her great love, to the British throne, to the man who laid a world at her feet.

DIVORCES BAR HER OFF THRONE

SHARES EDWARD'S "FAILURE"

LOVE LOSES AT LASELL

Girls Vote for Throne Over Wally

Love it seems should be second to ruple, according to Lasell College students.

In an informal contest conducted in junior English classes the great majority expressed their opinion that the newly created Duke of Windsor should have given up the woman he loves for the sake of the imperial crown.

But the prize for the best essay went to a southern miss who upheld the ex-King in his decision to abdicate for marriage to a one-time Baltimore belle.

PRIZE-WINNING ESSAY

Dark-haired Miss Martha Hume of Harrisburg, Ky., putting herself in Edward's position, wrote:

"I am free, white, 42, and King Edward VIII. Why shouldn't I live my own life? Why shouldn't Mrs. Simpson live here? Why shouldn't we live our lives together? All is fair in love and war. This is love; there may be war. I abdicate in favor of one less radical."

Joanne Bonaker of Worcester, considering the woman's viewpoint, took the opposite side of the argument, saying:

"If I were Mrs. Simpson and loved the King as much as she does, my intuition for decent common sense would not have let me steal the King of England from his millions of faithful and believing adorers.

'PEACE FOR HER SOUL'

"At heart I would sorely regret losing his companionship in life but my soul would be peaceful knowing that such a sacrifice was a worthy one to everyone surrounding. Would it not be better for one person to be unhappy than millions."

But Mrs. Simpson was not without her supporters among the girls.

Miss Marie Bonney of Danvers criticized those who condemned her, and pleaded that she had a right to her new happiness.

"I have heard so many people say she is just an ambitious woman. And all because of her two former divorces. She may have made two mistakes in her life and if this time she really loves King Edward, why not give her another chance?"

EDWARD PHONES TO WALLY; TRYST MAY BE BALKED

Rothschild Castle through Christmas, and then spend some weeks at Kitzbuehl, in the Austrian Tyrol, and later go to the Dalmation coast. He has spent happy holidays with Mrs. Simpson at each of these places.

The duke telephoned both London and Cannes several times during the day.

Staying at the castle as guest of Baron Eugene de Rothschild, the ex-king was understood to be occupying a suite of six rooms on the ground floor. From the windows of his rooms, he has a magnificent view across the valley of the River Triesting.

Later in the day, it was understood, he planned to visit Professor Neumann here in Vienna for an examination of the ear which has caused him some slight trouble in the past.

Last night, after arriving at the castle late, the duke enjoyed a dinner cooked by the chef of the late Emperor Charles of Austria.

Edward arrived in Vienna Sunday at 10:15 p. m., and was met at the station by Sir Wilfred Sethy, the British minister. A few moments later he drove away in Baron Rothschild's car. He arrived at the castle shortly before midnight.

Members of his party said that during the train trip Edward spent most of the time in his compartment, thinking. He read but little and appeared highly strung and nervous.

Bidden by Royalty

He may remain at the castle for several days, perhaps a week or more, and then may visit Archduke Anton and Archduchess Ileana of Hapsburg at their castle in lower Austria.

Prince Paul also invited him to stay at one of his castles in Jugoslavia. Edward is said to have told his aide he might make a short visit to Budapest.

Gendarmes with fixed bayonets were still on duty today at all entrances of the Castle Enzesfeld with strict orders not to permit anyone to enter the castle grounds and to arrest immediately any uninvited visitor.

The castle where Edward is spending the first part of his exile is a magnificent 75-room edifice of 40 rooms, staffed with 20 servants. It is situated in grounds which cover nearly 15 square miles. There is an excellent golf course over which Edward played three months ago.

Baroness Divorced

The baron waited four years to marry her after she and the count were divorced by mutual petition, such as permitted in Austria by law.

The baroness, smartly slim, is considered one of Austria's best-dressed women. Like her husband, she is a good golfer, tennis player and shot. Seven months of each year she and the baron spend in Paris, London, the United States or on the Riviera.

At this same lodge Edward and Mrs. Simpson were guests last summer, before storm clouds gathered around the British crown. And it is here, or at nearby Kitzbuehl, that they plan a romantic reunion on New Year's eve. Edward must wait until then if a authoritativey reported.

It is a message on arriving, conveyed by an aide to newspapermen aboard the crack Vienna express, Edward said:

"I am enjoying this trip, I feel well. I am thankful to everybody for the consideration shown."

The first act of the new Duke of Windsor on reaching the Rothschild castle, Schloss Enzesfeld, was to telephone Mrs. Simpson, in Cannes, assuring her of his safe arrival and renewing plans for an early meeting in the picturesque Austrian Tyrol.

Wearing a gray suit and dark topcoat, Edward descended from his private car with the light step of a man relieved of strain. He was followed by Sentinel Yard Detective Storrier, who carried the Duke's pet terrier, "Slipper," in his arms.

After exchanging greetings with his waiting friends, Edward accompanied by Sir Piers Legh, his former equerry and closest friend, and other members of the party proceeded through the imperial waiting room to the Rothschild car.

Suddenly he turned around, saying:

"I want you to let the photographers come along. They had a very tough journey and they deserve some pictures. Let's turn back."

So the party went back to the platform, and the former King stood smilingly while flashlights popped, blissfully complying with the requests of the photographers, after about five minutes he said, in German:

"Well, I guess, gentlemen, this is enough."

A strong detachment of Austrian police was on hand at the station to restrain the throng and to prevented reporters from approaching the former monarch.

News of his impending arrival had preceded Edward at Enzesfeld, and crowds of peasants waited at the gates of the castle, cheering Edward as he passed.

Baroness Rothschild, formerly Katherine Wolff of Philadelphia, a noted beauty and once the wife of Count Shoenborn, whom she divorced, is former King Edward's hostess in his Austrian love exile.

U. S. Hunts Captain Of Foundered Ship

New Bedford, Dec. 14 (AP)—Captain Benjamin Corla, master of the schooner Frank Brainerd, which sank off Bermuda November 29, is being sought for questioning in connection with the loss of his ship, Captain George Clark, of the U. S. Steamboat Inspection Bureau at Providence, R. I., said today.

The Brainerd sailed from New Bedford on November 17 for the Cape Verde Islands and was abandoned 19 days later, when an oil tanker rescued its 16 passengers and crew.

On December 7 the survivors, including Captain Costa, arrived in Boston, but Captain Clark said no trace of the skipper had been reported since that date.

KING WORKS ON BIRTHDAY; CHURCH WARS ON EDWARD

London, Dec. 14 (INS)—While the Church of England marshalled its forces for a drive against "Edwardian paleness," the birthday of the new King George VI was celebrated in London and throughout the British Empire today with flying flags and saluting cannon.

The celebration came as church authorities pointed to the new monarch as the standard-bearer of British respectability, and called attention of the nation to the fact that yesterday, his first Sunday as King, he attended church.

King George, however, did not let his birthday interfere with his duties. He was introduced to the Buckingham Palace secretariat and spent the morning acquainting himself with State business. He will preside over a birthday dinner party at his Piccadilly residence tonight.

At Buckingham Palace, King George received Viscount Halifax, Lord Privy Seal, and then joined the royal family at Sandringham for a birthday luncheon attended by Queen Mary, Queen Elizabeth, the Duke and Duchess of Gloucester, the Princess Royal, the Earl and Countess of Athlone and others.

CHURCH REBUKES EDWARD

Meanwhile the entire nation was stirred to its depths by a blunt rebuke, uttered solemnly by the Archbishop of Canterbury in an historic radio broadcast, to former King Edward and his circle of friends. The archbishop demanded a religious revival, and after his address was finished there were many predictions that England would see a revival of the trend toward "Puritanism" and Victorianism.

Indicating the church, as a result of Edward's abdication, intends a moral drive against night club life, luxurious social parties and easy divorce, the archbishop said:

"Last week, Edward VIII, after speaking his last words to his people left Windsor Castle, the center of all the splendid traditions of his ancestors and throne, and went out into exile.

"In darkness he left these shores. With characteristic frankness he told us his motive. It was a craving for private happiness.

"Strange it is that for such motives . . . he should have disappointed hopes so high and abandoned a trust so great.

"Even stranger it is that he should have sought his happiness in a manner inconsistent with Christian principles of marriage and within a circle whose standards and ways of life are alien to all the best instincts and traditions of his people.

"Let those who belong to that circle know today that they stand rebuked by the judgment of the British people."

Then, calling attention to Edward's hopes so high and abandoned a trust so great.

"Even stranger it is that he should have sought his happiness in a manner inconsistent with Christian principles of marriage and within a circle whose standards and ways of life are alien to all the best instincts and traditions of his people.

"Let those who belong to that circle know today that they stand rebuked by the judgment of the British people."

Then, calling attention to Edward's flight across the sea, "both at home and across the sea," the archbishop declared:

"It is the remembrance of these things that wrings from our heart the cry:

"The pity of it! The pity of it!"

George's 'Vow to Duty' Read in House of Lords

London, Dec. 14 (AP)—King George VI, in a message read in the House of Lords today, said:

"I have succeeded to the throne in circumstances which are without precedent and at a moment of great personal distress, but I am resolved to do my duty and I am sustained by the knowledge that I am supported by widespread good will and sympathy from all my subjects here and throughout the world.

"It will be my constant endeavor, with God's help and support by my dear wife, to uphold the honor of the realm and promote the happiness of my peoples."

The king's declaration was read by Lord Halifax, lord privy seal, as the peers finished the ceremony of swearing allegiance to the new ruler.

ROOSEVELT DUE HOME IN DAY

Aboard U. S. S. Chester, At Sea, Dec. 14 (INS)—Cutting across the gulf stream on a direct route from the Bahamas to Charleston, S. C., President Roosevelt today was approaching the end of his historic South American cruise which will have covered, by tomorrow, 12,260 miles with 22 days spent at sea and six in port.

Rested and invigorated, the President will be back in Washington tomorrow night to prepare for the opening of Congress and his inauguration for his second term. Many important vacancies in government posts are to be filled.

President Roosevelt plans to wait his return to Washington before reducing to paper his forthcoming message to Congress. He also must make final decisions regarding the budget.

Lowell Loomfixers' Walkout Voted

Lowell, Dec. 14 (AP)—Demanding a 20 per cent wage increase instead of the 10 per cent offered, employees of the Hoosic Manufacturing Company declared a strike today.

Meanwhile loomfixers in the Merrimac Mills delayed taking strike action until they determined whether an increase promised by that plant would meet their demands for 20 per cent. They went to work this morning, but a spokesman said they would quit unless their demands were met.

'Change Song Hails New Monarch

Early dealings were moderate, with the tone firm.

Government stocks were maintained. Gold shares advanced. Transatlantic issues and industrial stocks were steady.

MOVE TO BLOCK WALLY DIVORCE IS DROPPED

(Copyright, 1936, by International News Service)

London, Dec. 14—Deeply moved by former inKg Edward's dramatic farewell address, the "common informer," who last week sought to block Mrs. Wallis Simpson's final divorce decree, dropped his action today.

The informer, a barrister who declined to allow use of his name, decided he would not file the affidavit to support his first petition. As a result the time limit has expired and his action is now voided.

"I am not proceeding," he said, "because I have no wish to inconvenience Edward.

"I was stirred and impressed by his broadcast, when he honestly and frankly declared his love for a woman.

"I am writing Mrs. Simpson's solicitors to this effect."

The "informer" at first was reported to be an elderly West End dowager but later proved to be the attorney. If adequately supported, his action might have been sufficient to block Mrs. Simpson's final decree indefinitely, thus delaying her marriage to the ex-king until a new suit had been filed somewhere outside of England.

POWER CO. WINS IN HIGH COURT

Washington, Dec. 14 (INS)—The Duke Power Co., today won a technical victory in the Supreme Court in its fight to halt construction of hydro-electric plans by Greenwood County, S. C., with a $2,852,000 loan and grant from the Federal Public Works Administration.

The high court, in reversing the decree of the Fourth Circuit Court in which the New Deal won, did not decide the question of constitutionality of the $3,300,000,000 public works bond issue provisions of the National Industrial Recovery Act.

HIGH COURT RULES ON AIR 'PIRATING'

Washington, Dec. 14 (INS)—In its first decision involving right of radio stations to broadcast news from newspapers, the Supreme Court today denied the Associated Press an injunction against Radio Station KVOS of Bellingham, Wash., on the grounds that it had not been shown that $3000 was involved.

The effect of the decision, therefore, is to leave open the real question of whether or not taking of news is unfair competition and can be enjoined by federal courts.

The case originated when the Associated Press went into federal district court in Washington seeking an injunction against Radio Station KVOS of Bellingham, Wash. It charged the station with "pirating" news taken from its member papers.

HINGES ON DAMAGE

Both the Federal District and Ninth Circuit courts rendered decisions on the theory that possible damage to the amount of $3000—the jurisdictional amount for federal court cases—was involved. But the high court held that this point was not proved and that the suit should have been dismissed.

Justice Roberts read the opinion, which was unanimous.

The case was remanded to the Federal District court in Washington with instructions to dismiss the case.

The decision was the first growing out of the increasing use of news by radio broadcasters as a part of their advertising and service to radio listeners.

In the case before the court the news agency contended that the radio station took news from the Bellingham Herald, Seattle Post-Intelligencer and Times without its permission and before the value of the news had been exhausted by the newspapers.

JUSTICE ROBERTS' OPINION

The station was alleged to have charged more for advertising during the news period, and thus engaged in unfair competition with the Associated Press, which sued on behalf of its member papers.

The radio station contended that it had the right to use news after it had been printed in newspapers and thus distributed to the public, that the news was broadcast three to five hours after publication and that the radio station was not in competition with the Associated Press.

Summarizing the allegations, the opinion of Justice Roberts said that the Associated Press charged the radio station with "pirating" news from its member papers and that the radio station refused pleas to abandon the practice for its "newspaper of the air."

Wally Virtually Prisoner Until Edward's Flight

By ROBERT CHASSEUIL
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Cannes, France, Dec. 14—Mrs. Wallis Simpson was held a "virtual prisoner" at the Villa Leo Vici from the time of her arrival here by land until Saturday night, Jean Roure, in charge of special French detectives who guarded her, told International News Service today.

Every move Mrs. Simpson made throughout the grave constitutional crisis in London was dictated by telephone from England, Roure stated.

"Everything Mrs. Simpson did," said Roure, "was done on orders from London right up to the time Baron Brownlow left Saturday night. She is now free, and can appear publicly."

DETECTIVES LEAVE

Lord Brownlow, who was lording-waiting to King Edward, came here to see Mrs. Simpson on her hurried trip from England, and acted as his spokesman while the eyes of the world were upon her.

Mrs. Simpson left the villa by a rear door, presumably bound to play golf, but her whereabouts remained a mystery for the time being, and she successfully eluded news men.

Former King Edward's chauffeur, who had driven Mrs. Simpson here in her departure across France and had served her all last week, entrained tonight for London, leaving the American-made car for Mrs. Simpson.

Mrs. Simpson was returning to her old life, from which she was so abruptly taken by the London crisis.

She declined to make a statement or give an interview and allowed reporters but a brief glimpse of her.

Mrs. Rogers was responsible for the American woman's appearance. Deluged with telegrams and telephone calls for confirmation or denial of reports Mrs. Simpson had left, Mrs. Rogers conferred with her and then persuaded her to appear briefly a moment on the steps of the villa.

Mrs. Simpson smiled at the army of newspapermen and photographers and then withdrew into the seclusion of the villa.

TRYST PLANS DENIED

When she appeared on the steps Mrs. Simpson wore a blue jacket and slacks and a checked sports coat thrown over her shoulders like a cloak. Her nose was red.

She donned the coat, walked a few feet toward a bag of magazines, and stood for a few moments looking at the throng. Reporters were compelled to stand nearly a hundred yards away at a barred fence.

Reports Mrs. Simpson might rejoin the sailing for New York ever persisted after she held a long conversation with the ex-king, but well-informed sources close to her insisted otherwise.

WON'T JEOPARDIZE DIVORCE

Mrs. Simpson, these sources said, is anxious to avoid any action which might be prejudicial to the granting of her final divorce decree, due in April.

Word that Mrs. Simpson and the man who gave up the British throne for her had talked over the telephone came from an excellent source inside the villa.

It was accepted today it "most unlikely" that Mrs. Simpson would make a move to France after Christmas.

Meanwhile Mrs. Simpson is facing the future calmly, reading and answering letters. When the weather is good, she strolls about the grounds.

Shortly Commissaire Roure, who has been in charge of arrangements for guarding the villa, is to handle the return to Paris Wednesday and the Scotland Yard detectives will probably leave to return to London one or two men will be left behind.

One interesting incident occurred at the villa. It was learned that the villa, which had been dark, was suddenly illuminated. This morning it was learned that the meaning of the sudden blaze of lights was that Edward telephoned from Austria after everyone was in bed.

It was understood he talked with Mrs. Simpson for 20 minutes.

WAKE UP YOUR LIVER BILE—

Without Calomel—And You'll Jump Out of Bed in the Morning Rarin' to Go

The liver should pour out two pounds of liquid bile into your bowels daily. If this bile is not flowing freely, your food stays! Gets sour. It just decays in the bowels. Gas blocks up your stomach. You get constipated. Your whole system is poisoned and you feel sour, sunk and the world looks punk.

Laxatives are only makeshifts. A mere bowel movement doesn't get at the cause. It takes those good, old Carter's Little Liver Pills to get those two pounds of bile flowing freely and make you feel "up and up." Harmless, gentle, yet amazing in making bile flow freely. Queen Mother's Power

'Shadow Empress' Behind the King

(Roger D. Greene, former member of the London staff of the Associated Press, and now in its New York office, has written another story of Great Britain's royal family, explaining Queen Mary's place in the new set-up.)

By ROGER D. GREENE

New York, Dec. 14 (AP)—At 69, Queen Mary today finds herself restored suddenly to great "behind-the-scenes" influence in shaping the new era of empire.

During Edward's reign, despite shocked by the death by her monarch-husband, George V, last January, the stately queen went into retirement.

Edward ruled alone. He seldom consulted her. Strong-willed, trained from boyhood in the arts of sovereignty, he needed no emeritus guidance.

But the "one-man revolution" conducted by Prime Minister Stanley Baldwin, which swept Edward from the throne when he chose the love of Wallis Simpson instead of the crown of empire, has changed all that.

Shadow Empress

Now, with the shy self-effacing Duchess of York, famed for her smile and her motherhood than for knowledge of statecraft, it is likely Queen Mary may become even more the role of "shadow empress."

Historical commentators are agreed that Queen Mary exercised powerful influence over the philosophic George V. Some minutes it loved his stamp albums more than affairs of state, and that throughout their long married life he never made an important decision without first consulting Queen Mary.

Certain it is that in the sometime Privy Councils she presided over, Princess of Teck showed a strong bent for sovereign management. She was first engaged to Edward VII's eldest son, the Duke of Clarence, friend of influenza in January, 1892. Eighteen months later, on July 6, 1893, she was married to her fiancé's brother, George, and when he became queen on the death of Edward VII in 1910, gossips said her lifelong ambition had been realized.

Other gossips frequently heard in London depict her as a stilted figure, not only in the rearing of her five children, but in the time rebelled—but also in guiding the mild-mannered George V along the thorny paths of sovereignty.

Rebuked a King

The tale is told and illustrated over how she rebuked the king for the way he drove through streets by thousands, and that on one occasion, when the royal family was at Buckingham Palace and found George V in a bad humor, she said to him with a lady visitor, she said to him severely:

"George, did you ask the lady's permission to smoke?"

Straightening, he responded, meekly: Edward to a chair by, asked whether he loved his father or mother best. Prince Edward replied:

"Well, you see, father spoils me more."

In the substance of Edward's future, in an interview with Queen Mary on Monday Baldwin made it clear that the free-hearted, affable prince would be queen. Judging by Queen Mary's lifelong principles and autobiography, however, Edward will assume the "forbidden" marriage to the twice-divorced Wallis Warfield Simpson.

It may not be indefinite now.

"If you are determined to marry her, then you had better give up the throne. Bertie must not be brilliant, but he would make a good king—as your father was a good king."

In any event, Queen Mary has not let the constitutional storm cease ended and "Bertie" was safely the throne, guided by the counsels of his fond ever, moderate temperaments of Edward's great mother. Mrs. Simpson quietly left the Baltimore pharmacy to tea as a matter of support.

DOG Saves $15 FINE

GILLIGAN PET WATER-SHY

Thomas "Tommy," Gilligan, 29, of Madison avenue, Newton, former Harvard football star, today beat a court charge of washing his dog in a state reservoir, but only after he proved his Irish terrier is "afraid" of water.

Gilligan, now a federal agent with the alcoholic tax unit, had appealed a $15 fine in Waltham District Court in September.

The charge declared he threw sticks into the Ash street reservoir, Weston, which were retrieved by Duke, the dog, in violation of the Metropolitan District Commission rules.

Gilligan, it was revealed today, went to the district attorney last Saturday and offered to put the dog in a test to prove the animal is "water-shy."

Although Judge P. Sarsfield Cunniff of Waltham court refused such a test, District Attorney Bishop, a little skeptical over the entire matter, decided upon it.

No Ducks

So out went Gilligan and "Duke," accompanied by the judges—a group of Metropolitan policemen—to Magazine Beach, Cambridge.

Gilligan threw sticks into the water. The dog ran toward the water edge but stopped right there. A few more tries—same results.

Again "Duke" went to the water edge, sniffed at the meat, but refused to wet his paws. He whined a little, but it was "no go" as far as stepping into the water was concerned.

Gilligan offered to take off his shoes and stockings, roll up his pants and wade into the water to call the dog, but the officers told him:

"We're satisfied."

After hearing the results of the test, District Attorney Bishop said he was thoroughly convinced "Duke" does not like water.

Find File in Cell Of Girl Slayer

Mystery deepened today in the slaying of Mrs. Beulah Sawyer, 24, whose body was found in her jail cell here today, when police announced they had obtained confessions to partial participation in the crime from Mrs. Hope Morgan, 28, self-confessed "mastermind" slayer of her best friend, Elizabeth Gilbert.

"She'll be kept in her cell here after," Sheriff A. A. MacDougall of Ingham County announced, explaining such an instrument might be used for suicide or escape.

Aged Lady's Appeal:

Walks Eight Miles To Ask Basket

By THE CHRISTMAS BASKET FUND EDITOR

It was a perfect setting for tragedy when a Roxbury woman walked into the Christmas Basket Fund headquarters and asked for a Christmas basket. A cold rain slanted down from leaden skies, and it was a gloomy twilight.

It wasn't the kind of a day for anyone to walk four miles from Roxbury to downtown Boston.

Especially not for a middle-aged woman with heart trouble, who had to gasp for her breath after walking up five stairs, whose shoes were so shabby she can't go to church.

But it wasn't exercise that prompted the walk. It was necessity, hunger and despair.

All she wanted was a Christmas basket for herself and her child—not clothes, not coffee back to her Roxbury home nor even toys for her child.

Her story was but another in the litany of despair sounded in the hundreds of letters arriving daily at Basket Fund headquarters, 244 Devonshire street, in Winthrop square.

For every contribution and offer of assistance that comes there are five appeals for FOOD on Christmas Day.

Food for pitifully underfed boarding-out babies, for shivering, wizened children; a day's cessation in the 24-hours-a-day, 364-days-a-year struggle against poverty.

What are YOU going to do for them?

You can help them through the Christmas Basket Fund of the Boston Evening American-Sunday Advertiser, in these ways:

DANCE TONIGHT

By attending the three Christmas Basket Fund benefits now scheduled.

Tonight there's the third annual dancing party of the Paisley Weavers club, composed of employes of the Boston Evening American, to be held at the Normandie ballroom, in Washington street.

Next Sunday night there's the party to be given at the Penthouse atop the Hotel Bradford under the polished direction of Tommy Marin.

Next Saturday night the Olympia Skating club will hold its Gala Skating Party at the Boston Arena.

By sending your monetary contribution—anything from a penny up—or by telling of clothing or bedding you no longer have use for.

By volunteering to take care of some destitute family yourself.

You will provide a turkey dinner for the family and toys and a Christmas tree for the children.

TEACHERS GIVE $25

By singing in a Checker taxicab today and tomorrow. The Checker Company of Boston is donating a quarter of its profits between December 5 and 15 to the Basket Fund.

Thanks of the Fund editor today go to the Boston Elementary Teachers' club which presented us with a $25 check.

Also received today was the contribution of $61 collected by Boston Evening American truck drivers and paper carriers.

Here are some of the actual appeals received by mail at Basket Fund headquarters:

CASE 49

Could you please add me to your long list of people who are needing a basket to make their Christmas a happy and joyful one.

There are five in my family, my husband and my three children and myself. My husband is working but he is a cripple and he doesn't make much. What he makes it goes for rent and food so that does not leave anything for clothes. My daughter who is two years old is going around barefooted because she has no shoes to wear. My husband, the two older children and myself sleep together because we haven't enough bed clothes to keep us warm. My children's ages are three, two and four months.

I will be grateful for anything you will do to make this a happy Christmas for us.

This needy family lives in Allston. Anyone who wishes to help them may do so by calling the Basket Fund Editor, Liberty 4000, and ask for case No. 49.

CASE 50

Will you please send me a basket for Christmas. I have seven children. My husband died last March and my own health is poor. I haven't received aid of any kind. When our daddy was here, he did everything to make Christmas happy for us. We all miss him so much, it's hard to bear. His pay was small but we always tried to manage and now my funds are exhausted so that I will have to apply for aid very soon. If you will send me a basket it will help me to make Christmas pleasant for the children and I will be very thankful to you.

This is the first time I have asked for anything. Anything you can do will be appreciated.

This needy family lives in East Boston. Anyone who wishes to help them may do so by calling the Basket Fund Editor, Liberty 4000, and ask for case 50.

CASE 51

I was reading in the paper about kind hearted people that are donating to help out the poor people for Christmas. I am hoping that someone will be kind enough to help me out also. I am very sick in bed and am being put out of the house for non-payment of rent. I have no steam heat but use an old oil burner to keep me warm. Most of the time I haven't enough money to buy oil for it and we all go around freezing. I have two boys and three girls. My girl of 10 has no shoes and no coat. I have no money to buy them for her. Will you please send for a basket for Christmas and help us all out. Please, Please, don't forget us.

This needy family lives in Revere. Anyone who wishes to help them may do so by calling the Basket Fund Editor, Liberty 4000, and ask for case No. 51.

"I Wish I Could Broadcast Over the Radio How Good this Medicine Is"

Writes Mrs. Austin Maddox, Route 2, Box 174, Oxford, Ala.

"I had a dull headache and felt dizzy and I also had pains in my right side. Nearly every afternoon I had to lie down. My mother told me about your medicine and I took the Tablet form. It did away with the dizzy spells and built up my system. It kept me going during pregnancy. Today I have good health which I feel I would not have except for your medicine. If I could not get it I would be in bed half the time."

—Mrs. Austin Maddox

More than half the women who take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound bought the first bottle because some friend or neighbor recommended it. Right in your own town . . . your own neighborhood . . . there must be at least ONE woman who WANTS to tell you how good this medicine is. Ask her. Then try it for yourself. All druggists sell it. Liquid and Tablet form.

"I Was So Sick and Nervous...

that I could not do my work at home nor hold any other employment. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound put me on my feet. It relieved dizziness and nervousness. I am now doing my own work and working out in another home and I feel better than I have for five years. I recommend this medicine to girls and women."

Bay State Bachelor Girls' Income 113 Millions in '34

More single women filed 1934 Federal income tax returns in Massachusetts than in any state except New York, reports from the Washington tax bureau revealed today.

With 91,735 filing returns, single women showed a total net income of $113,352,000 while 7661 wives, the third highest number in the country, filed separate returns, showing earnings of $34,749,000.

Massachusetts residents paid $14,624,216 into the Federal Treasury last year, ranking seventh among the states. Approximately 7000 fewer returns were filed by the 242,728 persons reporting their incomes than for 1933.

$101.45 AVERAGE

The average Massachusetts income tax was $101.45, compared to the national average of $124.90, and the average Massachusetts' return was $3976.51, compared to $3125.42 for the country.

The principal sources of income —salaries, wages, commissions and fees—totalled $464,210,000 in Massachusetts with stock dividends totalling $151,669,000, the second largest. Business profits amounted to $91,021,000, partnerships profits $25,417,000, and rents and royalties $16,621,000.

LARGEST IN STATE

One return on an income of between $500,000 and $750,000 was the largest reported for the state.

Two returns reported incomes from $200,000 to $500,000 and two others, $250,000 to $300,000.

The largest number of returns was made in the $1000 to $1000 income range with 42,469 of those filing exempt from taxation and 21,050 paying the Treasury $140,241. The total income of this income class was $78,008,559.

Parties for Debs, Like Mixter Ball, Now Big Business

By BETTY ALDEN

Yet, when we think about the debutante ball which was given at the Hotel Somerset Friday evening, and a number of other presentation parties this year, it seems that these affairs might well be classed as big business . . .

MRS. LEWIS D. PARKER

Certainly, if a business organization put on an exhibition which cost in the neighborhood of $10,000, they would consider it a major undertaking . . .

Nor would any large wholesale florist sneeze at an order for enough flowers to completely bank the end of a ballroom, or transform it into a simulated moonlit garden . . .

Many business organizations have fewer employes than the total number of musicians, doormen, checkers and policemen . . . to say nothing of the small army of waiters required to serve the lobster patties, or the champagne, which is, of course, one of the most popular items at every party . . . At the dance given by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Mixter Friday evening at the Somerset the cost of the champagne must have been well over four figures . . .

So it is quite natural that, similar to every other big business, large parties need some protection . . . Not the sort of "protection" provided by racketeers . . . but insurance against uninvited guests crashing the party . . . lured by the prospect of a fine supper and all the champagne they can consume . . .

Very few girls are ever the offenders when it comes to "crashing" . . . but the boys, especially collegians, have long considered it rare sport . . . and a careful host is hard put to it to see that only those who have received invitations get by the checker at the door . . .

Even this checker, armed with an alphabetical list of all the invited guests, is inefficient protection, for the boys have all kinds of ruses . . . the most common of which is to give the name of someone they know has been invited and walk right in as the name is checked off . . .

It is not unusual for the name of some well-known man about town to be used by seven or eight crashers at one party . . . and in order to forestall this practice Mr. and Mrs. Mixter invented a new system, closely patterned after the police famous rogues' gallories . . .

A small identification photograph was pasted on the list, opposite the name of nearly every boy invited . . . in addition to other data concerning him . . . In some cases, when no photo was available, the man at the door was provided with the boy's description and details of his schools and clubs . . .

So if any adventurous youth did succeed in making his uninvited way into the ball, he was so overawed by the elaborateness of the precautions against his presence that he has not dared to talk about the event, and consequently has lost most of the fun of "crashing" . . .

EXCLUSIVE: TALLULAH BANKHEAD IN "REFLECTED GLORY" will follow "Frederika" to the Shubert, with January 11 the tentative date of the Boston premiere . . . If "Frederika" needs more than two weeks "break-in" here, Tallulah's third attempt at being a hit in Boston will be delayed . . . Teddy Glynn was offered the civil service job, but declined because of his fondness for his present post as clerk of the Roxbury court . . . Others are optimistic about the "clean-up remain's" fate . . . They predict the squad will be kept intact . . . Mayor James Treadgill of South Boston is in line for a courthouse job . . .

Joe E. Brown will campaign eleven horses at Santa Anita . . . And with the Florida racing season open, the same squad of "Pinks" who worked at two of the New England tracks will be in action . . . Beauty on Shubert Stage

Diana Gaylen as Mitzi in the revival of "Blossom Time," which was the fore-runner of the gala musical comedies of the early nineteen-twenties. The production tonight enters the final week of its stay at the Shubert.

Music Notes

By RUTH MARSTERS

This week's concert calendar offers several events of unusual importance to the music public of Boston.

Kirsten Flagstad, the celebrated dramatic soprano of the Metropolitan Opera Company, will be heard on Wednesday morning at the third in the series of Boston Morning Musicales in the Hotel Statler ballroom at 11 o'clock.

The program will open with a group of German lieder which will two songs by Strauss. "Seitdem dein auge in meines schaute," and "Ach, ich ich muss mich scheiden" and Brahms' "Liebestreu," "An ein Veilchen," "Meine liebe ist grun."

The second group to be sung in Norwegian includes songs by Grieg and Jordan.

Wagnerian operatic arias form the last group, "Einsam in Truben Tagen," Elsa's Traum from Lohengrin," the first act of "Lohengrin," and "Du bist der Lenz," Siegmund's Aria from the first act of "Walkure."

Mme. Flagstad will be accompanied by Edwin McArthur at the piano.

The Boston Morning Musicals have announced a change in the date of the concert in the series on January 13.

Owing to the illness of Vladimir Horowitz, originally announced for the concert, Mischa Levitzki has been substituted.

According to Mr. Hurok, the New York management, the pianist, recently operated upon for appendicitis, has found delay further delayed activities until February.

Mr. Horowitz has been signed by the committee for a concert engagement in next season's series of Boston Morning Musicales.

On Wednesday evening, Bernard Zighera will conduct the first in the series of concerts for chamber orchestra to be given in Jordan Hall.

The orchestra is composed of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will be assisted by guest artists throughout the series.

Gaismar Novaes, pianist, will be the soloist for the opening concert in the performance of Mozart's Concerto for Piano and Orchestra in E.

* * *

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will return from its western tour of last week to give, on Thursday evening, the fourth concert of the series in Sander Theater, Cambridge, and, on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, the ninth pair of concerts in Symphony Hall.

Serge Koussevitzky will commemorate the 75th anniversary of the birth of Edward MacDowell, whose music he will open with another American composer's Second Piano Concerto in D minor, Howard Goding, pianist who made his debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the performances of the same work several years ago, will be soloist.

The program for Friday and Saturday concerts will open with another American score — Arthur Foote's Suite in E major. The closing number will be Tschaikowsky's Symphony of Brahms in E minor.

The program for the Cambridge concerts will include, in addition to the Concerto, Tchaikovsky's Overture Fantasia, "Romeo and Juliet" and Cesar Franck's Symphony in D minor.

Gary Cooper Offered Role of Pirate

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS
Motion Picture Editor Universal Service

Los Angeles, Dec. 14—Who would ever have believed that C. B. DeMille, glorifier de luxe of bathtubs and beautiful women, would suddenly go in for glorifying American adventure-history in such a big way—and the switch looks permanent.

He has chosen "The Buccaneer," Maxwell Anderson's play based on the exploits of Sir Henry Morgan and the picturesque pirate Jean La Fitte, as his next historical venture.

C. B. is eager to arrange a deal with Sam Goldwyn for the loan of Gary Cooper for the role of the swash-buckling La Fitte, whose exploits in the period from 1812 to 1815 motivate this adventure yarn.

"Samson and Delilah," which would have given DeMille an opportunity to revel in his love of wierd scenery, has been indefinitely postponed and personally, we think it a smart move. Biblical spectacles with their endless pageantry are no longer welcome at the box office.

* * *

"Marry the Girl," Warner Brothers' hopeful comedy, will have a swell cast. Mary Boland goes into the role of the spinster sister, ensnife Hugh Herbert and Frank McHugh. These three together will be something in the line of fugger and heller laughs, and that isn't the half of it. Fresh Mr. Herbert side-steps in "Three Men on a Horse." Sam Levene and Ted Hurt, both oldtimers to any film, are important featured.

CHATTER IN HOLLYWOOD: Mrs. George S. Kaufman, known to her intimates as Ilse, is starting work for Samuel Goldwyn as story editor. To those who are wondering what will happen if she meets Mary Astor, who will also work on the Goldwyn lot, I think we can safely say they'll like since both are well bred women.

Mrs. Kaufman, although the wife of a famous playwright, is not winning her position as a result of her husband's fame. She is a very intelligent woman and will hold down her job as story editor entirely on her own merits.

Louella O. Parsons

I'd pay the price of a theater ticket anytime to see Carole Lombard in another "My Man, Godfrey," wouldn't you? Well, Paramount knows how well comedies of the type of "Godfrey" do at the box office so Gregory La Cava, its director, is being invited to do another Lombard special. Just between us I suspect it was Carole who sold the Zukorites the idea. "Easy Living," originally intended for Jean Arthur and Cary Grant, will be the first Lombard-La Cava comedy, if Greg signs and I suspect he will.

Snapshots of Hollywood

The KING VIDOR—BETTY HILL romance is cooling. CONSTANCE TALMADGE NETCHER, seriously ill for a few days reported much better and on the road to recovery. JEANETTE MacDONALD, mighty proud, and rightly so, of her Phi Beta Kappa gold key and life membership in this distinguished society; there's a KANSAS REPORTER telephoning JUDITH BARRETT daily and he isn't after a story either. JOAN BENNETT getting up a trailer party, of all things, for a New Year's weekend at Ensenada; all of our best stars are trailer conscious these days. EDWARD ARNOLD the most consistent attendant at the philharmonic—he never misses and is always in full evening regalia. WILLIAM K. HOWARD turning author with his "Queen Elizabeth of Ohio" in a current magazine. It's based on his English experiences of which he had aplenty when he made an Elizabethan picture; HOWARD STURGIS visiting the COLE PORTERS and life assumes a new interest for he is one of the few people who is never dull.

Leisure to Repent

By Ursula Parrott

CHAPTER XII

Gilbert glanced at his wrist-watch. This time Denise was late. And insistently he began to worry lest she had walked home and got into an accident in traffic in the Park! A few minutes later she arrived.

She had walked home, had lingered a little in the pale-gold sunlight, in that lovely air of English springtime.

Her thoughts were restless as that enchanted air. Within a week of her 22nd birthday, she felt a little lost and wasted, with all her life settled, and nothing settled! No pressing in anything, to the now pale green of the trees, in spring sunshine, to living!

Toward that husband she had thought she came to a final decision. How much she suddenly wanted of all that he was! Now that she did not stop to think, she would tell him that they were wasting their time lovers and three was no one going on even for the very little time they deserved. She would ask him to let go home and at once, she would get some sort of job and pay Gilbert back all he'd given her family.

She thought much better now of her interest at a distance, even than in that autumn afternoon, when she'd considered going to business college. Had not that motion picture director invited her in Morocco told her he would give her a part in films, she would come to Hollywood? Travel did seem to have wound her locks.

But it was not six months in pleasant climates that had so much improved her as the fact that she was growing up, proud, was turning a little where she had been arrogant, angelic, even her mouth growing warmer and more provocative, and her eyes a deeper and more shining hue. Kenia Sheldon had said last night at that instant when he said: "Not an obvious beauty, but she will be." She was flowering now.

A page boy brought a sealed envelope to Gilbert Winslow. He thought: why Lombard really grew to be sophisticated, when it's possible to get cabins on Sunday afternoons. He thought: Walt Disney would get hold. I wonder as—though she was no more than ten minutes late as he tore the envelope open.

He read the cable. His face whitened. He looked up and saw his wife coming across the antique toward him, smiling. He stood up. But when Denise saw her husband's face, she hesitated as if it had been struck off. Gilbert, you've some dreadful news—

Bad News!

He said, gravely: "Let's go up to one of the rooms where we can be young or innocent and she couldn't help hearing her after. Take it easy, darling. Don't look at me. Brenden, she was devoted to that sister of hers."

But no down her great eyes plunged as he said: "Gilbert, tell me now. Gilbert. Always better to hear bad news in private. Once I thought I would get hard. I would not

A Line of Fight Chatter Which Leads Nowhere

THE NEW YORK BOXING SOLONS, who normally do nothing but gum up the works in matters involving money, have placed a chip on the shoulder of a foreign fighter's promise to [illegible] anything. By consenting to give Max Schmeling a shot at Jimmy Braddock's championship button next June, the solons have reserved the power to impound $25,000 from Max' purse as a defense fund, if victorious, for use in Berlin. The [illegible] is very precious to the scribes and they want to keep it liquid. [illegible] will be spun [illegible] trunks. [illegible] six months [illegible] the New York [illegible] namely, Joe [illegible]

I do not wish to take a cynical view, but there is a [illegible] "out" to this arrangement—Mr. Adolph Hitler, the Nazi Fuhrer and mine man, who is both obdurate and important in all matters within his jurisdiction. If Schmeling finds his way to glory over Braddock and Hitler says "mein dank"—well then there will be nuddings [illegible] the Louisville scrap, and the N. Y. Commission, the [illegible] boys, both Mike and Joe, and Jimmy Johnston, as a [illegible] concerned, may confiscate Max' $25,000, tear [illegible] and stuff it in his pipes in the U. S. courts—[illegible] laughter.

HITLER SAID "NEVER AGAIN"

ONE SEEMS TO RECALL, THOUGH AMERICAN memories are notoriously short, that the Nazis have been contemptuous toward international contracts before. It would therefore not be wholly unthinkable that, with a [illegible] worth millions as state instrument to Dr. Joseph Goebbels, the propaganda minister who caters to [illegible] and symbolism and hero worship through inflammatory [illegible], a little thing like $25,000 would be no binder. The Nazi police state benefits above the covenants of its [illegible] citizens.

ALL BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN

THE MORE I PURSUE THIS LINE OF ARGUMENT the more aware I am that I have clamped a toe hold on a subject and don't know how to let go. For here I am in front of box trade when all the cigars I have smoked in New York fight solons for promotion [illegible] watch hearts just that very thing.

NEITHER EVIL MAY HAPPEN

NOW THAT IT IS PRESENTED in this fashion I think I can trace my inclination of thought of seeing the heavyweight fight title retired permanently to Germany [illegible] anxiously to have Louis [illegible] Schmeling a lover again, and thus hope that my professional opinions, so outspoken [illegible] early June, will be wind eaten.

Eddie Shore Near Death in Crash During Game

By ART ROSS

Since I retired from active service as a hockey player, I've frequently attempted to visualize, while hanging by my chin on the rails of the various N. H. L. rinks, just what would have been the fate of us old timers if the game had been played under the present rules.

Eddie Shore Near Death

At any rate, when Rabbit was about five yards from the prone Bruin, I first started to see. McVeigh was going at such a rate of speed that he was unable to stop. So he attempted to jump over Shore. However, he misjudged the height of his jump and one of his skates hit Eddie between the eyes.

Haney on Stock Market

'Blue Chip' Issues HAVE DISCOUNTED Everything in Sight

By LEWIS HANEY
Professor of Economics, New York University

New York, Dec. 14—A majority of the stocks traded in during the past week gained a little. The accepted "averages," however, were mixed, some being up and some down. The market was highly mixed, with little net change.

Bond averages closed a little higher.

In general, the week's performance was a typical early December affair. At this time of year, there is usually a great deal of shifting and switching of positions for tax purposes. All this is apt to result in apparent weakness in the relatively high-priced "leaders," while more background issues rise.

Expectedly, this sort of thing occurred last year and in December, 1934. Perhaps, however, it is a little more marked this year.

Last week, some big leaders such as American Can, were outstandingly weak, and these averages which are based on a small number of "important" stocks, showed declines.

Yet nevertheless, a majority of all stocks traded in closed higher every day but Monday.

Furthermore, activity was largely concentrated in the stocks that moved up.

The rise in bonds emphasizes the peculiar action of the higher grade stocks.

The plain fact is that a good many high-priced "blue chips" have, for some time, had little attraction, either from the yield standpoint or the speculation standpoint. They led the bull market at the start. Now they have in some cases, fully discounted all that is in sight.

But the backward industries and companies have some ahead and have begun to show net earnings and dividends.

Why should one sit with a stock which pays a low yield which has little chance to rise in price?

This question is emphasized by the discussion of schemes to tighten credit, which suggest the possibility of higher interest rates some day. (Incidentally, the trust problem and the labor problem are both apt to be more acute with the big leader type of company).

On the other hand, the special new developments and prospects suggest reasons for other stocks coming to the front. Last week, for example, lead and zinc stocks were among the most active and made new highs (E. G., St. Joe lead).

This came as a result of a really strong position of lead and zinc, and higher prices for those metals.

Similarly, realty and building, and railway equipment issues, showed merited strength.

Of course, some worthless speculative issues get a run along with the better ones. If one sticks to real values, however, the best bugs are to be found in exactly the fields where activity and new highs are now found.

There were about 75 new highs Friday and 55 on Saturday. This is significant as to the tendency that will probably prevail, and in the list will be found more likely looking stocks than in the blue chip group.

I can see little reason why the market may not act much as it did a year ago. That would mean further irregularity for a few days more, but with only moderate volume. Then, toward the end of the month, a good advance might be expected.

The chief doubts lie in the possibility of share-the-wealth schemes in Congress. Many traders will be cautious until after they have heard what Mr. Roosevelt has to propose.

There is also some fear of attempts to restrict the use of credit in speculation. The answer, however, is to be found in inflation. High money wages can be paid if prices are rising. Deficits for "relief" can be financed as long as borrowing can be arranged.

JUNIOR BIRDMEN OF AMERICA

DEVOTED TO THE INTEREST OF THE YOUTH OF THE AMERICAS IN AVIATION!

TODAY'S PILOTS OF MODELS —TOMORROW'S MODEL PILOTS!

Prospective contestants are already sending in their opinions on type, size and character of the plane to form the basis of the exhibition scale model contest at South Armory in January or February for Junior Birdmen of the Boston American wing.

Some of these already listed are the Fairchild 24, Monocoupe, Mr. Mulligan, a low-wing America and a Douglas army plane.

All scale model builders who plan to enter the competition are asked to answer these three questions:

What model would YOU prefer to build and enter in this contest?

What size wing span do you want—six, eight, ten or twelve inches?

Shall the model be solid or built up?

Send your answers to Junior Birdmen, 100 Summer street, Boston. Majority opinion will prevail, the model receiving the most votes being selected as the type which all contestants will build. Get your answers to headquarters immediately by postal, letter or personal visit.

Prizes will be $2, $1 and $1 for the makers of the best three. Entries will be judged on a point basis as follows: Ability to follow details of engine, cockpit, working controls, paint and finish, neatness, model detail, ingenuity of parts used and general appearance.

Two flying events will be held at the same time. Types of models for these will be announced later. Prizes will be eight pairs of tickets for use for current program at the RKO Keith Boston theatre for the high point scorers. Two pairs of tickets will be awarded to the two girls whose models get the longest flight times.

If want to see some fun at the third monthly indoor model flying competition at South Armory this coming Saturday morning.

It will consist of two events, one for hand-launched all-balsa gliders and one for Rise-Off-Water rubber models. This last, if it has any of the characteristics of last year's similarly named contest, will provide the laughs.

DANGER Ahead in MARKET

BUYERS IGNORE WARNINGS

By BROADAN WALL

New York, Dec. 14 (US)—"Everybody" seems to agree that stock prices, by and large, are "pretty high," but "nobody" does anything about it.

Sure, there have been warnings, loud and blunt.

The Federal Reserve became concerned and reduced the excess of bank reserves some months ago. This step was taken openly and frankly to head off dangerous speculation.

Now another similar step is being considered by the Reserve, although it doesn't want to go whole hog and raise interest rates too fast, if at all.

The head of the country's largest bank has issued his warnings of dangers that exist unless stringent restrictions are quickly effected.

Business leaders, meeting in convention last week, also proclaimed against gambling in stocks.

* * *

Even the White House has tried, in roundabout way, to intimate its partial distrust of the speculative pyramid—by stressing huge foreign ownership of our securities.

Many other sources, likewise, have issued warnings, all intended to emphasize the danger of a stock market run wild. To what avail?

Almost to a person, those interested directly in the stock market figure they can "beat the gun" before a sharp decline.

In the main, such confidence is based on a belief, almost a conviction, that "the public" will come into the market and buy its head off.

The funny thing about this is that the very people who talk this way confidently are unable to appreciate that they are part and parcel of this same "public."

In other words, a good part of the "public" already is in stocks, and in quite heavily.

* * *

Certainly, individual brokerage houses could not execute orders for more than 200,000 shares daily day in and day out, unless "the public" were trading in a substantial way.

Of course, those already in the market are counting on others of "the public" coming in and taking their stocks at higher prices. This is supposed to be the way the market "always goes."

However, as this column has repeatedly stated, bear markets have been experienced in stocks selling much lower than we have yet to know if in recent years, was not even in the market. In other words, the last sharp, professional, large-scale participants in the market in the past have themselves frequently caught the market wrongly and have suffered accordingly.

In England, where public participation is at a minimum, they have had their long bear market, too.

Still, there is wide confidence that the market is yet to attain its highest point, that 1929 will be duplicated, exceeded, some day.

Certainly, this is a possibility if thousands upon thousands of those people who have so far resisted the lure begin to plunge as stocks regardless of merit or price.

Yet, this is the very thing that the optimists in the market expect them to do—to come in and take the stocks off their hands at the huge advance already registered.

BUSINESS Booms at End OF YEAR

ALL INDUSTRY FORGES AHEAD

By B. C. FORBES

Developments as 1936 enters its final fortnight are nearly all encouraging.

Government revenue is substantially increasing.

In response to an offering of $750,000,000 long-term treasury obligations last week, bearing the low interest rate of 2½ per cent, almost $1,000,000,000 were tendered.

This reflects faith that the government's financial strength, and credit will be maintained. But it also reflects the dearth for capital for business requirements.

Retail trade, while affected adversely in various sections by weather vagaries, continues to run decidedly ahead of last year, and the mercantile world confidently looks upon the best holiday harvest since the 1929.

Moreover, the number of store buyers now arriving in New York and other metropolitan cities is substantially greater than 12 months ago.

Supplies of various classes of merchandise available for prompt delivery are described as inadequate to meet demands.

* * *

What of industry?

Steel manufacturers have more orders on hand today than any time since the depression set in. The public's fear that impended deliveries will not always be met during the coming months. Following the usual increases, the price trend is upwards.

Automobile production and sales continue at anything ever before experienced at a year-end. Labor troubles have interfered with output and deliveries of several popular cars.

Consumption of electric power is now averaging over twice recorded. Lower rates are partly responsible, but there is a still better showing.

Bank clearings are 17 per cent higher than this time a year ago.

Requests for installation of new telephones are more numerous than any time since 1929.

It is significant that borrowings on life insurance policies are declining sharply.

Nor is it without significance that the Commodity Credit Corporation is enjoying repayment of depression loans in cash instead of in kind as profit is officially predicted.

Commodity prices continue to advance.

Wheat has soared to a level not reached for 17 years.

The government's final estimate of the cotton crop of 12,607,000 bales has been followed by firmer prices.

That the cost of living will again rise in 1937 appears to be certain.

The amount of money now in circulation, $6,845,726,000, is greater than at the height of the boom days. Despite the holiday demands, plus dividend disbursements during the last six weeks in December, not equalled in any similar period.

JEWELRY TRADE SURVEY ENDS

Strongest Position in 6 Years

Splendor, brilliance, and elegance will form the contribution of the jewelry trade to the closing of 1936, which will mark the third consecutive year of its unimpeded progress.

With the buying of jewelry at the most avid rate since the early part of 1929, nearly all branches of the trade have reached the best position in six years with an improvement of 20 to 40 per cent over the showing registered in 1935.

That consumers have become strongly "jewelry conscious" for the first time in seven years is revealed by the extent of the demand which has spread to all articles.

Going from silverware, watches, clocks and costume jewelry, interest has become pronounced in diamonds and precious gems, with preorders for Christmas merchandise received before Thanksgiving. An indication that Americans again have become luxury-minded is present in the imports of cut diamonds into the United States. For the first eight months of 1936 these imports totaled $12,674,019, or more by 140 per cent than in the corresponding 1935 period. Of uncut diamonds, imports were $3,851,428, a rise of 137 per cent over the eight-months total of the year preceding.

Spurred greatly by the record-breaking dividend and bonus payments in connection with the improvement in general business conditions, sales of retail jewelry stores for 1936 have been estimated conservatively at $315,000,000. This would be an increase of about 25 per cent from the 1935 total of $252,000,000, the highest since 1929, reason of census, which represented a rise of 33 per cent from the 1933 retail sales of $175,000,000. These were some of the major developments revealed by a survey of the jewelry trade which has just been completed by Dun & Bradstreet, Inc.

U. S. steel unfilled orders Nov. 30, 4,141,955 tons, gain for month of 417,677.

Wabash reported in need of $10,000,000 cash for reorganization.

HEAVY WHEAT BUYING

Prices Soar to 7-Year Highs

Chicago, Dec. 14 (AP)—Heavy buying shot wheat prices upward almost 5 cents a bushel today to new highs for the last seven years.

December wheat soared to $1.23¾ when the market opened. This was the first time any wheat delivery on the Board of Trade has sold above $1.20 since January, 1929.

The sharpest wheat price advance witnessed here in weeks was accompanied by limited buying. Reports that Germany would buy abroad opportunely 1,000,000 tons of wheat are now coming into vogue.

The peak prices established at the opening today diminished only a fraction of as much as two cents in December wheat secured.

Other European nations, notably Italy and Great Britain, have been heavily buyers of wheat, recently from Canada, Australia and Argentina for supplies. This foreign demand coupled with wet weather in domestic production the past season and unfavorable growing conditions for the coming crop, has resulted in an advance of 35 cents a bushel in Chicago wheat prices in the past six weeks.

Dividend

Bunker Hill & Sullivan Mining & Concentrating Co. declared an extra dividend of $1 a share, payable December 30 to stock of record December 19.

Bank Statement

Boston balance $21,000,000
Boston clearance $36,000,000

Wall St. Hears

New York, Dec. 14 (INS)—That 1936 net of Borden (BDD) is expected to reach $3.80 a share, against $3.40 in 1935.

That fourth quarter profits of Wheeling Steel (WHX) should approximate $1,250,000, excluding year-end adjustments.

That total production of electrights this year is estimated at 113 billion kilowatt hours.

Webster & Atlas to Retire Preferred

Directors of the Webster & Atlas National Bank have mailed notices to stockholders, recommending the adoption at the annual meeting Jan. 12, 1937 as a plan to retire the $400,000 preferred stock of the bank, through the sale of $250,000 new common stock and the application of $150,000 of the reserves.

The plan provides that each common stockholder will have the right to purchase at par of $80 new stock on the basis of 2-fifths of a share for each share of stock now owned. Common stockholders at present have a pro rata interest in the bank which holds 4000 shares of this issue.

The issue will be distributed. The settlement of $150,000 of preferred stock out of reserves will be accompanied by a common stock dividend of the amount. Upon completion of the plan the capital of the bank will be $1,000,000 represented by 20,000 shares of common stock. The holder of one share of common stock also exercises his subscription rights will have two shares.

The holder of one share who does not exercise his subscription rights will have one and one-quarter shares. Stock not taken by subscription rights will be underwritten by the directors and a syndicate bonus for distribution.

Lincoln Stores

Directors of Lincoln Stores Inc. declared a special dividend on the common stock of $1 a share, payable January 21, 1937, to stock of record January 14.

TRADE At 6-Year PEAK

FEAR ECONOMIC RUNAWAY

By MERRYLE STANLEY RUKEYSER
Copyright, 1936, Universal Service

New York, Dec. 14—Led by a tumultuous rush on the retail stores for holiday gifts and general merchandise, the nation's economic activity, quickening its tempo in spectacular manner, has climbed to the highest peak in more than six years.

The current minor boom tendencies should be evaluated in light of the fact that business and employment are still subnormal.

CALMING EFFECT NEEDED

Nevertheless, current developments indicate that the justification for pump priming has long since passed, and the new economic need is for the calming effect of tapering off emergency federal expenditures.

Thus, reduction of outlays is no longer a routine matter of budget balancing, but a major lever in the economic controls designed to maintain an orderly recovery and to avert a runaway situation.

With proper management in the large, the movement upward potentially can go very much further.

There is lifting power in the combination of a genuinely balanced internal economy, with the principal groups in equitable relationships to that they can "feed" one another.

Business should be visualized as a physical exchange of goods (and services).

AVOID RESTRICTIONS

It is dynamic, and is predicated on the expectation of a rise in living standards.

It, however, distinguishes between growth, dependent on wholesome expansion in the one hand, and artificial stimulus resulting from mere monetary stimulants, on the other.

It is important that workers analyze the economic scene correctly, and avoid imposing restrictions which are harmful to their own interests.

The workers's real goal should be to increase the real reward of his efforts, the contents of the weekly pay envelope.

Incidentally, when certain militant groups get their own compensation far out of line, they make it difficult for other groups to employ them.

Accordingly, they get a high hourly rate, but are unable to find many hours of labor.

The building trades have been somewhat in this position, and many economists are looking for intelligent contractors to work out with the unions a better basis guaranteeing annual earnings on a higher level rather than grasping up the theoretical nonsense of paying homage only to the hourly rate.

"BREATHING SPELL"

The goal should be higher wages in terms of goods rather than the illusion of more increases in money wages, which may be wholly offset by a rise in living costs.

While the people of business improving there is much to be said in favor of a "breathing spell" in the country at Washington. Why do too much for a patient who is already fast recovering?

Even the railroads, which were long out of the market, have come into it heavily, especially for freight cars, ordering and equipment.

The explanation lies in the fact that postponement of additions and replacements, which is understandable in depression, cannot be continued indefinitely.

Time, involving the wearing out of existing property, is always on the side of recovery.

FURTHER GAINS AHEAD

The stage is set for further gains, but the principal question marks are near-by.

They center around the capacity for peaceful adjustment of the problems facing management and labor, on the one hand, and government and business, on the other.

The basic significance of the congress of American industry, held in New York recently, was the feeling out of the new urge toward harmony.

Intelligent business men are recognizing that it is not their job to dictate economic theories, but to fulfill the popular demand for a more abundant life. There will be profit in doing so.

NEW YORK CURB MARKET TRANSACTIONS

GOVERNMENTS

BOOM TALK

Curb by WASHINGTON Forecast

By HUGH E. BRADSHAW

When the confidential Washington letters begin to devote from one-quarter to one-third of their space to one subject it is a safe wager that it is a subject that shortly will be highlighted by official-dom.

Such is the case today with one of the letters that does not permit reproduction. And the subject is boom. It is pertinent, therefore that we consider it too, before there is a great burst of public talk about it.

Some advance notice of official talk of inflation, or the lack of it, is certain. Gold, the bank of issue, bank reserves and MCC appear to have no relationship to the stock market and nothing crude is said about the "new era" theory of stock-ratio attraction. But most in general are portrayed by speaking of some specific stocks and some increases in the cost of living during Washington official life so that the public may be educated for events where the emphasis will be on further increases.

In a general way we would say that few of the active business men in the country are worried about the boom or the stock market. Nothing disturbing Washington stirred. Rather does it seem that a real boom is expected by those in the affirmative parties to spread. It was a longer period and longer in coming than was expected, and to another amazing degree. As the same time when and if the explosive does go off, the shrewd markets it will not be because those are the principal interests in the country, though it is thought the market is now too high. But it will be due to the belief that the boom must be in order to get over the feeling and to maintain a reasonably rosy path from now on until election day.

Notebook: The supply-demand picture in the raw industry is now strongly favoring producers. . . . Consumption this year is expected to reach 9,000,000 tons. . . . Demand has been running so well ahead of production in recent months that there is now an actual shortage of yarn. . . . And stocks on hand are the lowest on record. . . . The textile strike accentuated this situation. . . . The core point in the industry's picture is that prices still do not permit a satisfactory profit. . . . Since an increase in capacity is not possible before the middle of 1937 at the earliest some lifting of prices is likely between now and next spring. . . .

Despite all the snorting of stock market bulls the general overhead did not show appreciable gains. The sluggishness of leaders soon had the primary bulls on the defensive, undoubtedly supplying the switch. It was not a switch to the bear side, however, for observers who prefer just the opposite type of action. It may well be that these leaders were taken on such to preserve public interest while the rest of the list will be attempted this week. It is by every prolonged advance in the past that such work does not show material gains until those who have sustained their interest have been rewarded with a step in the future literature of the list is a whole. . . .

* * *

Ticker Tricks: The rails are still in a position to offer the quickest pointer on the nearby market trend. . . . And we would also watch the steel individually to obtain a line on underlying sentiment. . . . Utilities are not doing much as a group. . . . It is noticeable that first one then another of the prominent holding companies equity ahead. . . . That action is likely to escape the notice of the average observer. . . . Yet it has its effect on the averages. . . . And ultimately will lift them to new highs, much to the surprise of those who overlook individual stock action. . . . Aircraft are slower than anticipated, but here too individual performances stand out.

STOCK MARKET

Price MOVEMENTS Strong

New York, Dec. 14—Utilities swarmed over the stock market ticker tape for a while today for gains of fractions to around a point or more following a Supreme Court ruling in the Duke power case.

Specialties, however, led the forward march in earlier proceedings, although a few of the motors, steels, rails, aircrafts, amusements, rubbers and farm implements gave a good account of themselves. Selling was encountered at intervals.

It was not overlooked that the high court decision failed to rule on the constitutionality of punishment administration pending by municipal power companies, but merely returned the case to the lower court for retrial. Power issues lost some of their spirit later when it was realized the main argument in the matter has yet to be heard.

Bonds improved and wheat at Chicago pushed ahead briskly. Mining issues felt reflection as the price of lead was given another boost. Foreign currencies leaned forward in terms of the dollar.

American Can got back on its feet for about 4 points. Others ahead included U. S. Steel, Bethlehem, Republic Steel, General Motors, United Aircraft, Douglas, International Harvester, International Hydro-Electric, North American, American Waterworks, Electric Power & Light, Standard Gas, American Telephone, U. S. Smelting, Cerro De Pasco, Westinghouse, du Pont, Goodyear, Goodrich, American Chain, Bucyrus-Erie, Southern Railway preferred, Santa Fe, St. Joseph Lead, Seaboard Oil, Warner Bros., Paramount, Eastman, Calumet & Hecla, Yellow Truck, General Outdoor Advertising and Armour.

Current Topics

With demand from the automobile makers growing, along with that of other industries, and production accelerating, the magazine "Steel" has added an optimistic note for the industry.

National steelworks activities the country round, should continue at the high peak for the year through out December and well into January at least, "Steel" predicted. And it was added, last week found themselves unable to accept further tonnage at fourth-quarter prices.

Followers of the automotive shares noted President Sloan's letter to stockholders in which General Motors in 1936 will have turned out more than 2,000,000 passenger cars and trucks, aside from a large volume of other products.

Sterling moved up 7-16 of a cent to $4.96⅞, at the beginning of foreign exchange transactions, and the French franc was .60 9-16 of a cent higher at 6.66 cents.

WAGE "EXTRA" TO Jewel Tea Workers

New York, Dec. 14 (AP)—A wage "extra" totaling 190,000 will be distributed among 2400 employes of Jewel Tea, Company officials or directors of the company announced today.

The bonus will be the fifth paid by the company and the third distributed this year. Total payments for 1936 will amount to approximately $320,000.

SENATE INQUIRY

Rail Financing Probe Resumed

By WILLIAM K. HUTCHINSON
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Washington, Dec. 14—A new instance of frenzied finance, in which New York banks poured millions of dollars into the capital structure of the bust Van Sweringen railroad empire, was revealed today at the Senate inquiry into railway financing.

Joseph Wheeler, counsel for Senator Burton K. Wheeler (D-Mont.), Senate chairman, revealed the Van Sweringens, owning the Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis (the Big Four) and the Chesapeake & Ohio railroads, had borrowed $20,000,000 from the Chase National Bank, the Guaranty Trust Company and the National City Bank of New York to purchase control of the Missouri Pacific railroad.

Wheeler also revealed that the Van Sweringens failed to exercise their option to keep the bonds, the market sank and the New York banks had to unload.

Wheeler then produced a memorandum from the bank's files which related how officers of the [illegible] were anxious to sell officers of J. P. Morgan & Company after the option matured, in order not to have the Morgan firm "in the way" of the two promoters' financing.

The memorandum showed Van Sweringens recognized and convinced that it was not contemplated that the bankers should incur any loss in connection with this transaction, that the transaction was intended to be in the nature of a bank loan and that if both the form of a purchase with an option to repurchase only because that was the only way the companies could comply with the provisions of the preferred stock."

Porter asked the superintendent of the bank of something about the deal.

"It was all a mistake," said Potter. "I knew about this purchase because I authorized it. It looked like a good bet at the time. I told these young men to drop the matter entirely and they did."

Briton's GAGGED Press Abuses Our FREE Press—Of Course!

BEHIND the barrage of abuse of the Rothermere press in London against what it calls the "newspaper Hooligans of the U. S. A." is one of the most striking instances of the dangers of a gagged press—a "reptile press," as Lord Macaulay called it—crawling on its belly before place and power.

Smarting under the degradation of a censorship, in a matter of mighty national import, that placed the English press on a level with the muzzled court sheets of Russia, Germany and Italy, Lord Rothermere uncorks all the phials of his vituperant rage and pours the contents on the American newspapers, which being ABSOLUTELY FREE, have printed the news when the English press did not have the courage, the self-respect, or the common honesty to print it.

ROTHERMERE'S paper further charges that the American papers had given "false and sensational publicity" to the friendship between the King and Mrs. Simpson.

As a matter of fact, the best and most sincere support that the King—and the consequent security and integrity of the British Empire—has received has been from the American press.

"Venomous gossip, twisted headlines and base rumors have been America's biggest export in the past six months," roars the Rothermere press.

The American papers have NOT printed gossip, rumors or twisted headlines in the Crown-Parliament-Simpson cause celebre.

They have printed the NEWS, printed it FIRST, printed it UNSHACKLED BY CHURCH OR STATE in a free country—and that is what really galls the Rothermere papers and their now sheepish-faced fellows.

THE American press is apparently the only FREE PRESS in the world today, the only SELF-RESPECTING, the only RESPECTABLE PRESS.

It has told the TRUTH—and nothing but the truth—about the situation in England, while Lord Rothermere and the other publishers of that country have sat silent and satisfied with a gag in their mouths.

Lord Rothermere anyhow is only a journalist by inheritance. His brother, Lord Northcliffe, built the Daily Mail and his other papers and brought them to a dominance in English journalism which Lord Rothermere has been unable to maintain.

It is grotesque that a COMMERCIAL, HABITUALLY INACCURATE—AND OF LATE A SUPPRESSED AND SILENT—PRESS, betraying the confidence of the people who support it and deceiving them as to the FACTS it is supposed to report, should criticize the American press, which performs its functions freely and honestly—and PRINTS THE NEWS.

THIS whole British affair has served better than anything else could have done to demonstrate to the world the dangers to a nation like England of a gagged press—a cringing, groveling, whipped cur press.

On the other hand has been shown the GREAT SERVICE that can be performed by a press, such as we have in the United States, that DOES NOT TAKE ORDERS FROM EITHER POLITICAL OR ECCLESIASTICAL OR COMMERCIAL masters.

A King and His Throne

By Nelson Harding

With his bow a regal scepter
He reigns king of hearts, possessing
The whole world as his dominion.

Still enthroned, this little monarch
Has retained his royal title,
Wears his crown in jaunty manner.

New York Day by Day

By O. O. McIntyre

New York, Dec. 14—Diary: Out with my lady to see a brave exhibit of Fred Detwiller's etchings. And stopped in at Lebus for a platter of Kentucky ham festooned with sirloin soaked oranges. Then to call on Rose Richards, Roxy's widow, newly home from Europe.

In the afternoon a magazine fellow came and asked me my ambition of the moment and when I said to play Ravel's Bolero on the xylophone and glare to it, he seemed in a huff. So in the twilight to circle the swan pond in the park and down the aisles, catching step with Eddy Duchin.

Dinner at a cozy French place, Du Pavest, and Leslie Howard, the play actor there. And at another table Irene Dunne, the cinema lady, and at still another Charles Laughton or his double. After to see Noel Coward and Gertrude Lawrence in a cycle of skits.

No wonder dogs siphon our sympathies so. The most severe punishment meted to our Boston nimble is to shop him into a dark closet a moment or so after some outrageous caper. Today in a frenzy of frolic he jumped upon a taborette of nicknacks, scattering some and breaking a few. He knew he had earned a commandment so he turned meekly and scratched at the closet door to be imprisoned. A picture of utter humility, bless him!

Fame: The great avenue jewelry house of Cartier has three plaques on its walls to commemorate the patronage of royalty. One of Queen Marie, another of Prince Edward when Wales and last the tragic Queen Marie of Spain. There is a certain department store glove counter with small brass strips embossing chair back with: The Greta Garbo chair, the Norma Shearer chair, the Joan Crawford chair, etc. And then the hot dog hutch at the Polo Grounds with a post sign: "Right here, after knocking out three home runs, Babe Ruth downed four of our hamburgers."

The exodus of adventurous, beautiful New York women—Peggy Joyce, for example—to London since the King's friend, Mrs. Simpson, has become the most talked of woman in the world, gumbers several score.

Not that any expect to ensnare a King, but it's admitted the publicity and whispers have given the American type a big plug in Britain. And there are a number of wealthy, loose and unmarried Lords, Dukes and Earls about who might be made allar material with proper blandishments.

Not many in the free lance field have done so many horrible pictures as Hilaire Gillespie. She has become in magazine offices and syndicate shops the official pinch hitter. When someone muffs an assignment or is late with any story, they phone Miss Gillespie and she knocks out the essay, vignette or such without hesitation.

It is a simple and venerable rule she follows: Do It Now. Miss Gillespie, incidentally, is remembered for her picture, the enduring canto, "When You Look Into the Heart of a Rose."

Bagatelles: George Worts, the writer, has joined literary ranchers in New Mexico . . . Leon Trotsky's favorite eating place in Paris was The Dome on the Second avenue . . . H. G. Wells, to intimates, has predicted death at 70 . . . The Kent Coopers were first of the New York colony in Miami Beach for the season. Fiske O'Hara has opened a voice studio in Los Angeles.

He popped out of a snack bar at Sherry's about dusk, all fisted up and eager for something or other. After doing a little shadow waltz shuffle and shadow boxing he walked over to a taxi driver at the curb. "Say, Buddie," he inquired, "do you know anything about flying?"

Will Rogers' Daughter

Interesting Faces and Pretty Dresses

TWO PICTURES OF MISS MARY ROGERS, DAUGHTER OF THE LATE WILL ROGERS, IN DRESSES THAT REPRESENT "THE LATEST FASHIONS."

Millions will be interested in these photographs of Miss Mary Rogers, daughter of the well-known American writer, philosopher and humorist, whose sound common sense and genuine Americanism made him the friend of the whole country.

These pictures are reproduced with permission from the December number of "HARPER'S BAZAAR," just published. Many an American girl will like these dresses, beautiful and extremely simple.

Mrs. Carmel Snow, brilliant editor of "Harper's Bazaar," informs you that in the picture with the arm stretched out Miss Rogers wears a gown "in iridium-white lamie, made in two pieces, with rhinestone buttons."

Young people, as is natural, will first see the dresses. Older men and women will see the charming youthful face and wish for this daughter of a good American a successful career, with much happiness and, above all, a good husband and good children to perpetuate her father's intelligence and her own fine character.

That's That

By Bruce Gustin

Fred Turner, twenty-two-year-old convict, spent sixty-four days digging out of the Missouri Penitentiary.

With a screwdriver, two cold-chisels and a hammer he drove a 140-foot tunnel, cutting through an eight-foot stone wall. When he holed through the surface outside the prison walls, guards, who had been tipped off to his escape attempt, were waiting to nab him.

All his labor and planning were wasted because somebody betrayed him. And still some people talk about "honor among thieves."

If Turner had been as ambitious and determined to lead an honest life and earn an honest living as he was to escape from prison he never would have landed in the penitentiary.

Stockmen on Western ranges have declared war on rodents.

Perry B. Carpenter, United States Grazing Director, explains that, in man's campaign to exterminate the coyote, Nature's law of the survival of the fittest have been broken. Prairie dogs and other rodents upon which coyotes preyed have increased and are robbing the range of its seed.

Wherever man upsets Nature's balance he makes more trouble for himself. That is a universal rule. It cannot be broken.

The decision of Federal Judge Sullivan, in Chicago, dismissing the suit brought by a meat-packing operator in an attempt to force packing companies to refund 1½ and one-half million dollars of processing taxes to 350,000 wholesale and retail meat dealers, gives the government another talking point in its fight to get this same tax money.

Processing taxes collected by the packers in the form of higher meat prices certainly do not belong to the packers now that they have been held unconstitutional.

The government will contend that what belongs to nobody else it has a right to take for the benefit of all.

A Painter Who Paints

The Human Side of the News

By Edwin C. Hill

Edwin C. Hill

Aston Knight, landscape painter, is a great, bluff fellow. Colonial, gardening, he should have shouldered his way back in the Middle Ages. One can fancy him armed to the teeth, riding in the wars of the period, or, perchance, in the train of Italian Cesare Borgia, maybe, or the great French knight, Bayard. But the man can paint!

American as Bill Nye or Will Rogers or Calvin Coolidge, Aston Knight is devoted to that quaint and picturesque corner of France we know as Normandy. Normandy, whence Guillaume de Conquerant sailed forth to seize England and produce a long line of kings whose blood is carried today by the young man who has set all Britain and her empire in uproar.

Aston Knight loves to paint Norman scenes—the charming, winding rivers, the crumbling old mills, the fields of flowers. But now and again this lusty master of color and design—and how he loathes all those fake "futurists" of—ahem!—the United States and produces canvases that are wholly delightful. He is exhibiting these days here in New York, and the versatility of this sterling American painter is thus interestingly revealed.

TALENTED ARTIST

From the grandiose Yosemite, with the late afternoon light glowing on the towering cliffs as seen from the wooded gloom of the valley, he can turn with equal interest to the "Beaver Dam Marshes" of Long Island and achieve a little gem to the earned play of grays he finds there.

So much for a glimpse of the man's work. Ruth to me, in talking with him about life and the cosmos and what makes things tick, his personality is well-nigh overpowering. He has a terrific detestation of art fakers—the shyfellows who defile the great altar of art with their wretched angularities and their senseless curves, their stupid prisms and their general obscenities. These so-called "modernists," who cancel their lack of ordinary talent by the most downright affrontery. The whole tribe that does idiotic things with children's blocks and old rags and calls it painting.

He seems never to change, Aston Knight.

"Rot," he says. "All damned rot! The fellows don't know how to paint, that's the size of it. They are like children making mud pies and pretending they have a feast. It's too silly to talk about and that damned freakish thing is dying of malnutrition.

"Of course, the day of meticulous detail in painting is done with, and that is a good thing. It is sense we all are 'Impressionists' if that is what the modernistic freaks call themselves, but we who call ourselves honest painters really try to capture nature in some one of her authentic moods. We don't try to make the grand old girl look like a rock pile or a problem in algebra. We don't try to 'kid' the public or 'jest with le bon Dieu'

"Photography killed detail in painting—the detail that Meissonier and Detaille and those old boys loved down to the last button and foglace—but it didn't absolve the painters from painting the truth of what they saw as they saw it."

A POWERFUL MAN

At 58, he is a whale of a man, powerful, with a mental activity and restlessness which accord with his bulk and strength. One of the biggest heads ever set upon human shoulders belongs to him. He demands a size of hat so big that none of the Fifth Avenue shops can sell him one. He has to have his hats made to order. His biceps measure 16 inches, 20 inches around, today. A long time ago he hit a man who was persistently annoying a woman and it was three days before the fellow came to.

He makes you think of one of those old navy-handed Norman knights and barons who followed in the train of William when he set forth to force Saxon Harold to keep the oath sworn on saints' bones in the Cathedral of Caen.

A great artist and quite a man!

Listen, World!

By Elsie Robinson

Yes, it's a true story. Traveling man—in the 40's. Made big money from '27 to '29—lost it in the crash. Went woozy for a while. Then he got a job selling a line of goods. Worked hard, developed the temper of a fiend. However, in time he cut all that out.

But there was one habit he couldn't shake — gambling. Vows he will, over 'n' over. Then doesn't.

Elsie Robinson

"Take last week," sez he. "I was busted. Said to myself, 'If I can win $50, I'll quit.' So I did win $48. But did I quit? No! Within three days I'd sunk it all. Now I'm back where I started, vowing again I'll quit IF—But will I? Notta chance! I claim all traveling men are gamblers at heart. Elsie, what would you do in my case?"

What would I do? First—I'd stopping kidding myself that I was something unique. If all traveling men are "gamblers at heart," so are nine out of ten other human beings.

You're not different, brother, and I'm just coddling your conceit to pretend you are. What you have is as old as Adam: taking his chance on that apple. And if others can snap themselves out of it—which they can and have—so can you!

DISCOVER WHY

Having fixed that in my noodle, I'd next try to discover the WHY of gambling. Or any other trouble-raising vice. What makes respectable mortals, with an honest hunger for orderly lives, rob smuck and do any of a thousand reckless things which waste their money, wreck their chances and break their hearts?

Why, in short, does our seemingly perverse human nature choose danger, when it might have safety . . . disorder, when it might have peace?

I suspect that it's because most of us aren't getting the essential excitement we need.

Shocking as the statement may seem, gambling supplies a mixing emotional vitamin which mediocre, red-blooded people require for health and happiness.

Gambling, in itself, isn't wicked. It's normal and necessary. A human progress was built on a gamble. Columbus gambled. So did Washington and Abraham Lincoln and Socrates—every experimenting scientist, adventuring pioneer.

ALL BORN GOOD

Gambling which serves life is gloriously right. As natural as breathing. It's when gambling, instead of helping, hurts life, that it becomes a menace. But, why do we let it become a menace? Because—I repeat—we haven't enough healthy risks in life. So we turn to the unhealthy ones.

I'll wager that if the average decent, fellow who has the blessed misfortune to be born bisexed could go on a fishing or hunting trip often enough . . . or homestead on a quarter section . . . or take up some avocation that appeals to him—experimenting, painting, amateur tinkering, iron working—he'd find the gambling fever ebbing from him like a tide.

For it IS a sickness. All sin is a sickness. People aren't born bad. People don't want to waste their lives. But they can't adjust their natures to the muddled programs of our current outmoded civilization. They can't find the right jobs, the right adventures. So they take the wrong ones.

That isn't sob-sistering, brother. It's the latest findings of modern science—as well as the theory which a young man taught 2000 years ago on the hills of Galilee.

You're not a gambler. You're not a "bad woman." Sure. You're not deliberate kings and murderers, 16-year-old Al and Bill. You're just sick people who need something. Go out and get it. If you REALLY WANT IT, it's waiting for you!

And if you don't really want it and won't try to get it—then you deserve all the sorrow you're making for yourself. Which helpless me, will be pretty.

Bring Back Boy for Christmas

LITTLE Chester Harris, the Cambridge boy who disappeared five weeks ago, is alive and held captive somewhere in Greater Boston.

That is the opinion of Chief Timothy F. Leahy and his Cambridge patrolmen who have searched vainly for the child since his disappearance.

As a last desperate measure, resorted to when everything else failed, Chief Leahy now issues the following public appeal:

"Bring Chester back to his parents and make the Christmas of 1936 a truly happy one for his grief-stricken family.

Men and women who have children will know the feeling that prompts this plea.

If Chester lives, he MUST go home. There is no one so lacking in human sympathy as to rob a mother's arms at this, the holiest, happiest season of the year.

WPA To Retain Needy Men

AS uncomfortable, almost, as the ancient king's guest who sat at the banquet table with a sword suspended by a hair dangling over his head is the modern worker who goes daily about his task with ever the threat of loss of job before him.

Because Massachusetts WPA Administrator John J. McDonough has removed that threat from hundreds of needy relief workers, his kindly act is worthy of consideration and praise.

The WPA was a depression measure, designed to provide temporary employment to the jobless. It was never intended to substitute for the higher paid, better opportunities of private industry.

But during the Christmas season it would be cruel and heartless to discharge men and women whose only income is the pittance they receive from their relief or welfare jobs.

The Lost Python

By Frank Sullivan

A 25-foot python which had been shipped from New York to the Lincoln Park Zoo, in Chicago, has failed to arrive, and Dr. Floyd Young, the director of the zoo, has asked railroad officials to help look for it.

Now then, we must face the facts. This is the Christmas season, when there is a pardonable confusion on the railroads. That python may show up ANYWHERE!

Therefore, a word or two about pythons and their habits may not be amiss here, so that if the lost serpent turns up at YOUR house, or YOURS, or YOURS, you will know how to handle the situation gracefully.

* * *

First, no care in opening any box that looks as though it might contain a python, or any box that actually has stenciled on it "Python—Handle With Care—This End Up—Use No Hooks—Rush."

Second, if you open a box and discover that you are "It," i. e., that the lost python belonging to the Chicago Zoo is inside, DO NOT LOSE YOUR HEAD! If you betray annoyance the python may decide to retrace annoyance, too, and I am not at all sure he hasn't got the better right.

After all, YOU haven't been cooped for a week or so in a stuffy box that has been bumping and thumping about in the Christmas rush.

* * *

Act as though the appearance of a python in your household were a matter of routine.

Edge toward the telephone, keeping an eye on the python, get the express company on the wire and tell them they have delivered a python to you which you didn't order.

If the man at the express office tells you he is terribly sorry but no rushed that he cannot possibly call for the python until after New Year, and would you mind holding it until then, you must resign yourself to the inevitable and bend every effort to make the python's stay as pleasant as possible.

* * *

The first thing to do is feed him. Remember what Napoleon said, "A python crawls on its stomach." Pythons like pigs.

Therefore, it might be well if everyone living along any railroad provided himself with a live pig immediately. Just in case.

Once you have the live pig, half the problem of entertaining the python is solved. Possibly all of it.

The python is not a fussy eater.

He lives a simple life, rising early about mid-March and breakfasting shortly thereafter, in April, on a live pig.

By ten-time, in July, he has a light snack consisting of another live pig, and then eats nothing until dinner, which is served promptly on the dot of October and which consists of a live pig.

The python never eats between meals, unless it is an occasional nibble at a live pig.

* * *

If you treat the python with tact and gentleness you can be sure you will win his gratitude and love, for he is really not a bad sort, as snakes go.

But if you cross him you are apt to find yourself in a tight squeeze.

Today's Text: "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on Thee."—Isaiah 26:3.
